Thru the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson, the editor and wife were privileged to witness the sham battle at the fair in Thief River Falls Friday night. It was something wonderful to a civilian and was said by the soldiers to be quite realistic and reminded them of the terrible times in France.

Golden Valley Experimental Plots

Owing to the condition of the roads, many who wished to do so, were unable to visit the experimental tract on Saturday, July 22nd, the regular visiting day.

No doubt many will wish to visit the fields at some other time during the season. For the benefit of such it has been arranged to have a guide at the field Saturday afternoons and Sundays except during the hours of service at Golden Valley.

MRS. ABBEY PROUD OF HER BIG GAIN

Weight Increased 39 Pounds and Nine Years' Trouble Ended.

"I hardly see how I endured such awful suffering, and if it hadn't been for Tanlac I don't believe I would be here today," said Mrs. Mollie Abbey, of Jennings Lodge, Ore.

"For nine years everything I ate caused gas to form so that it almost drove me distracted. I didn't dare eat any fruit and for four years if I even drunk a glass of cold water I would suffer dreadfully. No one who didn't see me can imagine the awful condition I was in.

"But Tanlac changed all this and now I'm simply feeling fine. My appetite is splendid. I eat anything I want, have actually gained thirty-nine pounds and have so much strength and energy I easily do all my housework. Tanlac is a wonderful medicine."

The Salary of M. P.'s.

The salary of an M. P. is £400 (nominally $2,000) a year, on which he has hitherto paid income tax. As an income this is inadequate, but in the days of anti-waste campaigns both ministry and house of commons shrink from increasing it. But the law officers of the crown suddenly discovered that an M. P.'s expenses may legitimately be reckoned against his income, so that the poorer of them will now pay no tax at all. A happy issue, relieving the poor M. P., endearing the government to his grateful heart and throwing no odium on parliament ministry, since it seems that this is the ordinary law and always was, although no one suspected it till a few weeks ago.—New Republic.

"Ah, here are Fell and Ansley!" exclaimed Maillard, almost with relief. "I—ah—my friends, I don't suppose you've seen Bob recently?"

"Yes," he said in his peculiarly toneless manner. "Yes, we have. At least, I believe it was he——"

"I'm worried," said Maillard, anxiously, hurriedly. He made an expressive gesture of despair. "He's in costume, of course. I've been given to understand that—well, that he has been—well, drinking."

"He has," said Jachin Fell, without any trace of compassion. "A number of the Krewe are occupying one of the rooms in the building, and they must have been visiting it frequently. I trust for your sake that the fact hasn't become generally known inside?"

Maillard nodded. Shame and anger lay heavily in his eyes.

"Tut, tut, Joseph," he said, gently, a fund of sympathy in his voice. "Boys will be boys, you know; really, this is no great matter! Don't let it hit you so hard. I'll go with you to find the room, of course. Where is it, Jachin?"

"We'll all go," put in Ansley. "We'll have a little party of our own, gentlemen. Come on, I believe we'll be able to discover the place."

The four men left the foyer and started through the corridors.

"I hear," said Judge Forester to Doctor Ansley, as they followed the other two, "that there has been astonishing news today from the Midnight Masquer. It seems that a number of people have received back property this afternoon—loot the bandit had taken. It appears to have been some sort of a carnival joke, after all."

"A poor one, then," responded Ansley, "and in doubtful taste. I've heard nothing of it. I wouldn't mind getting back the little cash I lost, though I must say I'll believe the story when I see the money——"

He broke off quickly.

As they turned a corner of the corridor to the four men came realization that they had attained their goal. From one of the rooms ahead there sounded snatches of a boisterous chorus being roared forth lustily. As they halted, to distinguish from which door the singing proceeded, the chorus was broken off by an abrupt and sudden silence. This silence was accentuated by the preceding noise, as though the singers had checked their maudlin song in mid-career.

"D—n it!" muttered Maillard. "Did they hear us coming? No, that wouldn't matter a hang to them—but what checked them so quickly?"

"This door," said Fell, indicating one to their right. He paused at it, listening, and over his features came a singular expression. As the others joined him, they caught a low murmur of voices, a hushed sound of talk, a rattle as a number of chips fell from a table.

"Cursed queer!" observed Jachin Fell, frowning. "I wonder what happened to them so abruptly? Perhaps the deal was finished—they're having a game. Well, go ahead, Joseph! We'll back you up as a deputation from the blackcoats, and if you need any moral support, call on Judge Forester."

That gentleman flung open the door, and Maillard entered at his side. They then came to a startled halt at view of the scene which greeted them.

The room was large and well lighted, windows and transom darkened for the occasion. Tobacco smoke made a bluish haze in the air. In the center of the room stood a large table, littered with glasses and bottles, with scattered cards, with chips and money.

About this table had been sitting half a dozen members of the Krewe of Comus. Now, however, they were standing, their various identities completely concealed by the grotesque costumes which cloaked them. Their hands were in the air.

Standing at another doorway, mid way between their group and that of the four unexpected intruders, was the Midnight Masquer—holding them up at the point of his automatic!

"By heavens!" he cried furiously. "Here's that d—d villain again—hold him, you! at him everybody!"

In a blind rage transported out of himself by his sudden access of passion, the banker hurled himself forward. From the bandit burst a cry of futile warning; the pistol in his hand veered toward his assailant.

This action precipitated the event

Perhaps because the Masquer did not fire instantly, and perhaps because Maillard's mad action shamed them, the nearer members of the drinking party hurled themselves at the bandit. The threat of the weapon was forgotten, unheeded in the sweeping lust of the man-hunt. It seemed that the fellow feared to fire; and about him closed the party in a surging mass, with a burst of sudden shouts, striking and clutching to pull him down and put him under foot.

Then, when it seemed that they had him without a struggle, the Masquer broke from them, swept them apart and threw them off, hurled them clear away. He moved as though to leap through the side doorway whence he had come.

With an oath, Maillard hurled himself forward, struck blindly and furiously at the bandit, and fastened upon him about the waist. There was a surge forward of bodies as the others crowded in to pull down the Masquer before he could escape. It looked then as though he were indeed lost—until the automatic flamed and roared in his hand, its choking fumes bursting at them. The report thundered in the room; a second report thundered, deafeningly, as a second bullet sought its mark.

Like a faint echo to those shots came the slam of a door. The Masquer was gone!

After him, into the farther room, rushed some of the party; but he had vanished utterly. There was no trace of him. His complete disappearance confused the searchers. After a moment, however, they returned to the lighted room. The Masquer had gone, but behind him had remained a more grim and terrible masquer.

In the room which he had just left, however, there had fallen a dread silence and consternation. One of the masqued drinkers held an arm that hung helpless, dripping blood; but his hurt passed unseen and uncared for, even by himself.

Doctor Ansley was kneeling above a motionless figure, prone on the dirty floor; and it was the figure of Joseph Maillard. The physician glanced up, then rose slowly to his feet. He made a terribly significant gesture, and his crisp voice broke in upon the appalled silence.

"Dead," he said, curtly. "Shot twice—each bullet through the heart. Judge Forester, I'm afraid there is no alternative but to call in the police. Gentlemen, you will kindly unmask—which one of you is Robert Maillard?"

Amid a stunned and horrified silence the members of the Krewe one by one removed their grotesque headgear, staring at the dead man whose white face looked up at them with an air of grim accusation. But none of them came forward to claim kinship with the dead man. Bob Maillard was not in the room.

"I think," said the toneless even voice of Jachin Fell, "that all of you gentlemen had better be very careful to say only what you have seen—and know. You will kindly remain here until I have summoned the police."

He left the room, and if there were any dark implication hidden in his words, no one seemed to observe it.

CHAPTER IX

On the [illegible]

[illegible] o'clock on the [illegible] Wednesday the great white Maison Blanche building was deserted and desolate, so far as its offices were concerned. The cleaners and scrubwomen had long since finished their tasks and departed. Out in the streets the tag-ends of carnival were running on a swiftly ebbing tide. A single elevator in the building was, however, in use. A single suite of offices, with carefully drawn blinds, was lighted and occupied.

They were not ornate, these offices. They consisted of two rooms, a small reception room and a large private office, both lined to the ceiling with books, chiefly law books. In the larger room were sitting three men. One of the three, Ben Chacherre, sat in a chair tipped back against the wall, his eyes closed. From time to time he opened those sparkling black eyes of his, and through narrow-slitted lids directed keen glances at the other two men.

One of the men was the chief of police. The second was Jachin Fell, whose offices these were.

"Even if things are as you say, which I don't doubt at all," said the chief, slowly, "I can't believe the boy did it! And darn it all, if I pinch him there's goin' to be a h— of a scandal!"

"Chief, you're up against facts. Those facts are bound to come out and the newspapers will nail your hide to the wall in a minute. You've a bare chance to save yourself by taking in young Maillard at once."

The chief chewed hard on his cigar. "I don't want to save myself by putting the wrong man behind the bars," he returned. "It sure looks like he was the Masquer all the while, but you say that he wasn't. You say this was his only job—a joke that turned out bad."

"Those are the facts," said Fell. "I don't want to accuse a man of crimes I know he did not commit. We have the best of evidence that he did commit this crime. If the newspapers fasten the entire Midnight Masquer business on him, as they're sure to do, we can't very well help him. I have no sympathy for the boy."

"Of course he did it," put in Ben Chacherre, sleepily. "Wasn't he caught with the goods?"

The others paid no heed. The chief indicated two early editions of the morning papers, which lay on the desk in front of Fell. These papers carried full accounts of the return of the Midnight Masquer's loot, explaining his robberies as part of a carnival jest.

"The later editions, comin' out now," said the chief, "will crowd all that stuff off the front page with the Maillard murder. Darn it, Fell! Whether I believe it or not, I'll have to arrest the young fool."

Chacherre chuckled. Jachin Fell smiled faintly.

"Nothing could be plainer, chief," he responded. "First, Bob Maillard comes to us in front of the opera house, and talks about a great joke that he's going to spring on his friends across the way——"

"How'd you know who he was?" interjected the chief, shrewdly.

"Gramont recognized him; Ansley and I confirmed the recognition. He was more or less intoxicated—chiefly more. Now, young Maillard was not in the room at the moment of the murder—unless he was the Masquer. Five minutes afterward he was found in a nearby room, hastily changing out of an aviator's uniform into his masquerade costume. Obviously, he had assumed the guise of the Masquer as a joke on his friends, and the joke had a tragic ending. Further, he was in the aviation service during the war, and so had the uniform ready to hand. You couldn't make anybody believe that he hasn't been the Masquer all the time!"

"Of course," and the chief nodded perplexedly. "It'd be a clear case—only you call me in and say that he wasn't the Masquer! D—n it, Fell, this thing has my goat!"

"What's Maillard's story?" struck in Ben Chacherre.

"He denies the whole thing," said the worried chief. "According to his story, which sounded straight the way he tells it, he meant to pull off the joke on his friends and was dressing in the Masquer's costume when he heard the shots. He claims that the shots startled him and made him change back. He swears that he had not entered the other room at all, except in his masquerade clothes. He says the murderer must have been the real Masquer. It's likely enough, because all young Maillard's crowd knew about the party that was to be held in that room during the Comus ball—"

"No matter," said Fell, coldly. "Chief, this is an open and shut case; the boy was bound to lie. That he killed his father was an accident, of course, but none the less it did take place."

"The boy's a wreck this minute." The chief held a match to his unlighted cigar. "But you say that he ain't the original Masquer?"

"No!" Fell spoke quietly. "The original Masquer was another person, and had nothing to do with the present case. This information is confidential and between ourselves."

"Oh, of course," assented the chief. "Well, I suppose I got to pull Maillard, but I hate to do it. I got a hunch that he ain't the right party."

"Virtuous man!" Fell smiled thinly. "According to all the books, the chief of police is only too glad to fasten the crime on anybody—"

What Is It Worth to Change a Tire?

The dust or mud, the grease and grime, the tedious delay—all are things we like to avoid.

But the time to think about these things is when you buy the tire—not after the blow-out occurs.

Outward appearance counts for little.

It is the material in the tire and the construction of it that determines its strength.

Goodyear recognizes these facts and all Goodyear Tires are made of long staple cotton.

Many 30 x 3½ clincher tires are made of short staple cotton from ½ inch to 1⅛ inches long.

Yet this high grade guaranteed Goodyear Tire costs only $10.95.

You can buy some tires for even less than this but none with the fine materials and construction of this one.

Can you afford to take a chance on more frequent tire troubles for the sake of the slightly lower price of cheaper tires?

HER AILMENTS ALL GONE NOW

Mrs. Sherman Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lake, Michigan.—"About one year ago I suffered with irregularities and a weakness and at times was obliged to stay off my feet. I doctored with our family physician and he finally said he could not understand my case, so I decided to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. After I had taken the first bottle I could see that I was getting better. I took several bottles of the Vegetable Compound and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and I am entirely cured of my ailments. You may publish this letter if you wish."—Mrs. MARY SHERMAN, Route 2, Lake, Mich.

There is one fact women should consider and that is this. Women suffer from irregularities and various forms of weakness. They try this and that doctor, as well as different medicines. Finally they take Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound, and Mrs. Sherman's experience is simply another case showing the merit of this well-known medicine.

If your family physician fails to help you and the same old troubles persist, why isn't it reasonable to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

Evidently a Good Riddance.

News of Minnesota

Events of the week throughout the "State of Ten Thousand Lakes" told in brief form

Stillwater—William Albert Stoddard, aged 78, died at his home here as a result of a stroke of apoplexy. He was a Civil war veteran. Mrs. Henry Walton of Minneapolis is a niece of Mr. Stoddard.

Duluth—A total of $67,930.53 was awarded land owners near the town of Colvin in the White Face river district. The land, it was claimed, was flooded through construction of a dam by the Great Northern Power company at Colvin.

Minneapolis—William J. Hopkins, for 50 years a resident of Hennepin county, died at his home near the Lyndale bridge, Bloomington township. Since coming to Minnesota Mr. Hopkins has been engaged in farming.

Duluth—George Bailey, known as the "cowboy patrolman" of the Duluth police department, gained further laurels when he rescued two drunken male bathers from Lake Superior by lassoing them.

Tracy—Mrs. Jane Robins, 87 years old, a resident of this section since 1873, died at the home of her son, John A. Robins, in this city after a brief illness.

St. Paul—Five St. Paul lawyers, James E. Kelley, W. G. Graves, Styles W. Burr, C. W. Farnham and C. A. Severance, left for the Bar association meeting at San Francisco, Cal., August 8 to 10.

Sleepy Eye—Emil Ellingson forgot that his machine was in gear when he got out to crank it after the engine had died. The car ran over him. He is now in a hospital with two broken legs.

Mankato—Fowler & Ray, Mankato manufacturers, have notified Mr. Bowen that their plants at Mankato, Leroy and Austin were practically without fuel.

Minneapolis—Four thousand new homes in Minneapolis are credited with swelling the quarterly receipts of the Minneapolis water department to the highest figure in its history.

Sleepy Eye—After a search for many years S. S. Riggs of this place has just located his son, Leslie Riggs, who disappeared from his home in Madison, Wis., when he was 11 years of age.

Duluth—Stricken with cramps while swimming in the St. Louis river, Hugh Carscadded, 10 years old, drowned. Although the body was recovered shortly after the accident, efforts to resuscitate the boy were futile.

St. Paul—The month of July was the coolest in seven years and the dryest in six years, according to the monthly meteorological summary issued by U. G. Purssell, meteorologist.

Sherburne—Coal dealers at Sherburne report that they are entirely out of coal and need several carloads immediately for threshing and domestic use.

Minneapolis—A one-story frame building at 723 Main street northeast, owned by Peter Szczech, was ordered demolished by George H. Nettleton, state fire marshal. The building constitutes a firetrap, he said.

Montevideo—A. A. Aarnes, former county auditor and a resident of this place since 1886, died at his home here after a long illness.

St. Cloud—An amendment to the city carnival ordinance refusing license to all carnival companies hereafter, will be recommended to the city council by Mayor Matson. The mayor's decision follows a request by the Minnesota department of the United States public health service, urging all cities and villages in the state to keep out such amusement companies.

Crosby—George H. Crosby, Duluth, "father of Crosby," has donated to the city a strip of land containing a fraction more than 17 acres, along the shores of Serpent lake, for a public park. This, together with the park site donated by Mr. Crosby at the time the city was started, gives the city about 2,000 feet of shore line, 300 feet wide.

Northfield—Charles Rand, disabled war veteran who has been working as a janitor for $50 a month, has established his right to a $78,000 estate left by his mother 11 years ago, and is on his way to New York to take over his fortune.

Elmore—William Maland, aged 24, son of B. J. Maland, a pioneer merchant of Elmore, hanged himself in his father's barn. He had been in ill health since an attack of influenza while serving at Fortress Monroe, in the World War. Young Maland attended the University of Minnesota and was a member of a prominent Faribault county family.

Dodge Center—Dodge Center may have an auto sleigh factory if the plans of Mack Green, former resident of this place, develops. Green has a device which he claims was thoroughly tested last winter which will enable automobiles to travel through snow.

Minneapolis—Plans for a better system of supervision and administration for Minnesota rural schools will be worked out at the annual meeting of the Minnesota Education association Oct. 25 to 28 in St. Paul, according to Philip E. Carlson, principal of the Roosevelt high school, who is president of the association.

St. Paul—Deposits in the state banks of Minnesota at the close of business June 30 last, reached a total of $436,292,169.89, or a net increase of $13,121,462.16 over the showing on April 7 last.

Bemidji—Walter E. Fowler and John Curry, former blacksmiths in the Twin Cities, have asked permission of the state to trap muskrats to start a breeding farm about 20 miles north of Bemidji.

Sherburn—A. G. T. Broun, a banker, is believed to be able to quote accurately more of the Bible than any man in the state. With the exception of the geneological parts of Chronicles it is said Mr. Broun knows the Scrip-

Fairmont—It is reported that the shortage in the accounts of O. L. Shively, former manager of the Farmers' elevator at Ceylon, will reach about $21,000, instead of $16,000.

Duluth—More than 500 person attended the sixth annual summer institute, crops and livestock inspection at the Northeast Experiment farm.

Worthington—H. E. Lamb, commander of Worthington post of the American Legion, is probably the oldest commander of a Legion post. He enlisted in October, 1917, at the age of 62, and is now 67.

Fairmont—With the remarkable score of 97, Juanita Brodt, living at Fraser, was awarded the honor of having the best garden cultivated by juniors in this section, in a contest.

Winona—Henry Einhorn, a farmer near here, is in a serious condition at his home as a result of being crushed between a barn and a tractor, which was being used to move the barn.

Waterville—The Waterville Public Library association has elected the following officers: President, E. E. Spear; vice president, Mrs. George O. Greene; treasurer, L. J. Ebeling; secretary and librarian, Mrs. Jennie Foster.

St. Paul—Burns caused the death of two children at the St. Paul city hospital. Loane Shelton, 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. M. B. Shelton of White, S. D., died after suffering for 10 days. Lucille Sofi, 8-year-old daughter of Tony Sofi, Lake Gervais, Canada, also died of burns.

Hibbing—An unusually large number of range men are leaving for the harvest fields in the beginning of the biggest movement of farm labor ever attempted in the Northwest. Trains are carrying the range residents to North and South Dakota farms.

Montevideo — Montevideo, with a temperature of 97, was the hottest place in the Northwest during past 24 hours. New Ulm and Campbell, with 96 each, ran neck and neck for second place, and Waseca came third with 94.

Waseca—The funeral of Mrs. Augusta Meyer of Freedom, a pioneer resident of Waseca county, was held from her home. Mrs. Meyer died after living here since 1850, coming here when Indians still frequented this section. She was born in Germany, December 29, 1842.

Rosemont—The new nine mile pavement betwen Farmington and Rosemont on trunk highway No. 1 is opened to traffic. Work on the remaining 20 miles under construction is to be finished before cold weather, according to Charles M. Babcock, commissioner.

Waterville—The Le Sueur county commissioners have ordered the reassessments of Montgomery and Kilkenny townships as the result of inequalities with other parts of the county.

Minneapolis—F. L. Reidy and Charles Hume, postoffice inspectors, returned to Minneapolis from New York, where they participated in the roundup of three men in connection with the million dollar mail robbery in that city.

St. Paul—The Third Infantry band from Fort Snelling will furnish the music on the annual tour of the Northern Minnesota Editorial association, Aug. 9, 10, 11 and 12, which will visit Park Rapids, Itasca state park and Bemidji.

Minneapolis—More than one third of the normal quota of men are now employed in the shops of the Great Northern railroad, according to a statement by that company. More than one thousand men have been employed by the company in the last week, according to Ralph Budd, president.

Moorhead—Leonard Copling, 3 year old, was seriously burned here when a 14 year-old boy poured gasoline over his breeches, touched a match to them and ran away. Harold Nordale was brought into juvenile court charged with setting fire to the child's clothing.

St. Cloud—W. R. Norenson, consulting engineer of the quartermaster general's office in Washington, has arrived here to make a survey and map of the proposed site for the veterans hospital to be built here.

Jackson—The authorities here are trying to apprehend a stranger who worked for several days in the country north of here purporting to take orders for a large St. Paul mail order house. The men did a flourishing business. Sheriff O. C. Lee has been informed. Upon taking each order the man, it is said, demanded a cash deposit of $10. In a few instances farmers gave the man checks but in most cases he was paid the amount in currency. The time for the arrival of the goods has passed but none has been received and the man cannot be located.

Minneapolis—Every train leaving Minneapolis for Northwest points carries 50 or more farm hands for the harvest fields of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Montana railroad and labor men estimated that approximately 2,500 men were shipped daily.

Mankato—Negotiations are nearing completion whereby the Iowa-Minnesota Power Company, of Chicago will take over the properties and business of the Northwest Utilities company. The latter company formerly had its headquarters in Mankato but the head office is now at Spring Valley.

HAD STUDIED HIS SUBJECT

Little Bobby's Essay Showed He Knew Practically All There Was to Know About Doors.

Little Bobby Jones was told to write an essay on "Door," and the effort which he sent in was as follows:

"Most houses have all the doors that they need, and no house is complete without at least one. The two main differences between a door and a gate is: first, their opposite location; and, second, that people have much less respect for a gate, and would rather kick it than knock on it.

"But a gate is more useful than a door because it does everything that a door can do, and, besides that, it can be climbed over, and often is.

"The door handle is a small but important part of the door which people never appreciate until it comes off. Most people never notice the door handle unless it is brought to their notice on account of having jam spread all over it.

"Doors are great things to give people privacy, and would give them still more if it wasn't for the keyholes."—Exchange.

Hubby—I can't understand why you would always show such a mean and cranky disposition in the morning.

Wife—At what other time should I show it, may I ask? You're not here during the rest of the day.

HOW BOOKS ARE DISINFECTED

Method Employed in France Is Said to Be the Most Successful Yet Devised.

The danger of contagion from books that have been in the hands of persons suffering from various diseases has led to the invention of methods of disinfecting, of which none appears to be more effective than that devised by a member of the municipal council of Paris.

This process consists of two features. In the first place, the books are placed in a "beater," where a strong current of air opens every leaf, and an aspirator sucks out the dust and deposits it in aseptic water. Then they are suspended in a disinfector, the covers being bent back and held by clips, so that the leaves are widely opened, and placed over a heater, which for a long time subjects them to a temperature of 167 degrees Fahrenheit. The paper is not damaged, and the efficiency of the process is said to be well demonstrated.

Cleaned the Stream.

"Caught anything?"

"No. Haven't even had a bite."

"That so? He must have got them all then."

Quarrelsome.

[illegible] we were married [illegible] we would never get along.

"Well?"

"Well, they were partly right."—Detroit Free Press.

DECLARED HIMSELF AT ONCE

New Yorker Saw Fearsome Possibility of Near Future and Gave Wife Due Warning.

Visitors to Central Park the other day saw a new angle of the family pet out for an airing, reports the New York correspondent of the Pittsburgh Dispatch. A young woman was out with her variegated parrot. The bird stalked majestically about the lawn, but quickly came back and perched on the young woman's finger whenever she called. His comings and goings to and from the finger gave the parrot its prescribed exercise, whether it wanted it or not.

The young woman didn't seem to mind the crowd that gathered about to watch. In fact she seemed rather proud of the attention she and the bird were attracting. Jiggers, whose family pet is a dog, happened along with his wife and stopped to look.

"I suppose the next thing," he remarked to his wife, "will be that I'm to take the canary up to the park for a walk. Right here I announce the answer: Nothing doing!"

He Admits It.

"What did the fortune teller tell you?"

"Oh, a lot of foolishness. Said I would be lucky in love."

"Well, aren't you?" demanded his wife.

"I [illegible] sure."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

"There's a Reason"
Don't try to cook THIS FOOD.

No heat with this summer meal

A DISH of crisp, delicious Grape-Nuts, with cream or milk (some berries or fresh fruit, too, if you like) is cooling to serve, cooling to eat and cooling to digest—with a charm of flavor and goodness that rouses appetite enthusiasm. No preparation, no cooking—no heating of the body afterward, as heavy, starchy meals do—but well-rounded nourishment for every bodily need.

Try this way out of the heat bother and uncertainty that usually goes with the midsummer food problem.

Letter From Morck Family

Puyallup, Wash. Aug. 6, '22

Editor News:

We are now at the end of our journey, at least for the time being. This country certainly looks good to us after some of the barren desolate stretches that we passed thru. But we also saw beautiful fertile valleys, to say nothing of the scenic wonders. Our description could never do justice to the wonderful works of Nature. Among the beautiful places we saw was the Yellowstone National Park where we spent two days. Its a place everyone should see if given an opportunity to do so. Another pretty place was Lake Pend a Orielle in Idaho where we drove along the lake edge for about 30 miles. Sometimes it seemed that the mountain rose out of the lake so on one side of the road you could look into the lake quite a distance below us and on the other side the steep mountain. There were innumerable places like this in the Rocky and the Bitter Root Mountains, but the one person who could not gaze around was the driver because he had to watch his step very carefully on the steep narrow roads.

On two occassions we camped in the mountains among the pines in preference to the city camp grounds. We managed to camp near a stream where trout was plentiful and we caught some for our dinner.

We visited Spokane one day but as we were nearing our destination we were anxious to go on.

The Cascade Mountains were very easy to cross, even the Fords made them in high. The waterfalls were pretty to see, especially the Suoquahmie Falls at the foot of the mountain. We also noticed the magnificence of the spruce and cedars.

We are now living in Puyallup Valley. The city of Puyallup has a population of about 10,000, located in the largest berry industry in the world, only nine miles from Tacoma. There are two paved roads to Tacoma and one to Seattle. Auto bus lines to every near by points.

Five transcontinental railroads run through here and eighty six daily trains. It has the largest fruit cannery on the coast. This particular valley is the home of the Big Red Raspberry. Apples are not grown as extensively here as in the Wenatchee and the Yakima vallies, but we have large orchards of apples, pears and cherries. We are not certain where we will locate yet.

Best Wishes to all.

S. Morck and family.

Leo Horien came home Saturday after his team and with Albert Larson went to Stephen, the next day to take in the threshing season.

Mrs. N. N. Landro and three children of Alamo, N. Dak., came last week to visit at the home of her brothers, Alfred and Guy Anderson and their families.

Peter Hanson's mother from Roseau visited here one day last week at the home of the former and then went to Thief River Falls to visit a daughter.

E. T. Eide cut the second finger of his right hand across the knuckle last Wednesday. He did not think it at all serious until he found that he had lost the use of the finger and on going to the doctor it was found that the tendons had been severed. These have been connected again but he will carry his arm in a sling for a number of weeks.—Spooner News.

Rev. Myhrer hurt his back one day last week while changing tires on his auto. He was taken to the hospital for treatment, and was able to come home again on Wednesday of this week.

The new rye crop is being marketed and it is of fine quality, some of it testing as high as 59 pounds to the bushel. Some wheat has been marketed that tested 61 lbs. to the bushel.

The yield of rye is generally good. The highest yield reported is that of a 22 acre field on the Birkeland place, farmed by Geo. Johnson, of 52 bushel to the acre. Thats some crop.

A petition signed by nearly 2400 voters has been filed with Mike Holm, Secretary of State, asking for the division of Beltrami county.

The proposed new county has a valuation of over two and a half millions and is to be called Lake of the Woods county. E. T. Eide of Spooner is named as one of the county commissioners.

About time that people of this end of Marshall county think of creating a new county. The coming year will be one of exceptional activity and if the county is divided and the county seat is established here this community will grow by leaps and bounds and land will be at a premium. Yet the cost to taxpayers will be no more if as much as now and the county seat will be much more accessible.—Middle River Pioneer.

"Books be d—d!" snorted the chief, and leaned forward earnestly. "Look here, Fell! Do you believe in your heart that Maillard killed his father?"

Fell was silent a moment under that intent scrutiny.

"From the evidence, I am forced against my will to believe it," he said at last. "Of course, he'll be able to prove that he was not the Masquer on previous occasions; his alibis will take care of that. Up to the point of the murder, his story is all right. And, my friend, there is a chance—a very slim, tenuous chance—that his entire story is true. In that case, another person must have appeared as the Masquer, which seems unlikely—"

There was an instant silence. Jachin Fell regarded his benchman with steady gray eyes. Ben Chacherre met the look with almost a trace of defiance. The chief frowned darkly.

"Yes," said the chief. "That's the size of it, Fell. You're keepin' quiet about the name of the real Masquer; why?"

"Because," said Fell, calmly, "I happen to know that he was in the auditorium at the time of the murder."

Again silence. Ben Chacherre stared at Fell, with amazement and admiration in his gaze. "When the master lies, he lies magnificently!" he murmured in French.

"Well," and the chief gestured despairingly, "I guess that lets out the real Masquer, eh?"

"Exactly," assented Fell. "No use dragging his name into it. I'll keep at work on this, chief, and if anything turns up to clear young Maillard, I'll be very glad."

He departed. Neither Fell nor Chacherre moved or spoke for a space. When at length the clang of the elevator door resounded through the deserted corridors Ben Chacherre slipped from his chair and went to the outer door. He glanced out into the hall, closed the door, and with a nod returned to his chair.

"Well?" Jachin Fell regarded him with intent, searching eyes. "Have you any light to throw on the occasion?"

Chacherre's usual air of cool impudence was never in evidence when he talked with Mr. Fell.

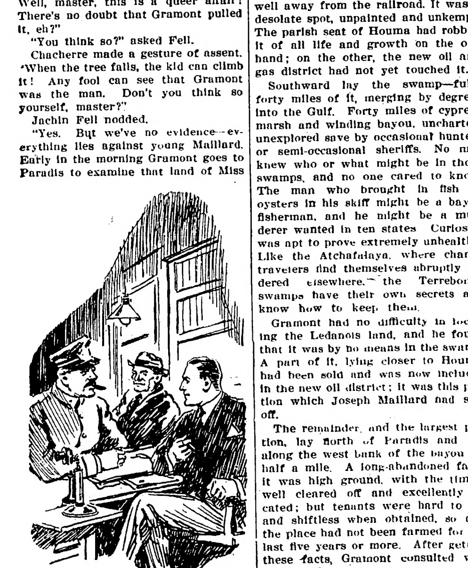
"No," he said, shaking his head. "Hammond worked on the car until about nine o'clock, then beat it to bed, I guess. I quit the job at ten, and his light had been out some time. Well, master, this is a queer affair! There's no doubt that Gramont pulled it, eh?"

"You think so?" asked Fell.

Chacherre made a gesture of assent. "When the tree falls, the kid can climb it! Any fool can see that Gramont was the man. Don't you think so yourself, master?"

Jachin Fell nodded.

"Yes. But we've no evidence—everything lies against young Maillard. Early in the morning Gramont goes to Paradis to examine that land of Miss Ledanois' along the bayou. He'll probably say nothing of this murder to Hammond, and the chauffeur may not find out about it until a day or two—they get few newspapers down there.



"Look Here, Fell! Do You Believe in Your Heart That Maillard Killed His Father?"

"Drive down to Paradis in the morning, Ben; get into touch with Hammond, and discover what time Gramont got home tonight. Write me what you find out. Then take charge of things at the Gumberts place. Make sure that every car is handled right. A headquarters man from Mobile will be here tomorrow to trace the Nonpareil Twelve that Gramont now owns."

Chacherre whistled under his breath. "What?"

Jachin Fell smiled slightly and nodded. "Yes. If Gramont remains at Paradis, I may send him on down there—I'm not sure yet. I intend to get something on that man Hammond."

"But you can't land him that way, master! He bought the car—"

"And who sold the car to the garage people? They bought it innocently." A peculiar smile twisted Fell's lips awry. "In fact, they bought it from a man named Hammond, as the evidence will show very clearly."

Ben Chacherre started, since he had sold that car himself. Then a slow grin came into his thin features—a grin that widened into a noiseless laugh.

"Master, you are magnificent!" he said, and rose. "Well, if there is nothing further on hand, I shall go to bed."

"An excellent program," said Jachin Fell, and took his hat from the desk. "I must get some sleep myself."

They left the office and the building together.

Three hours afterward the dawn had set in—a cold, gray and dismal dawn that rose upon a city littered with the aftermath of carnival. "Lean Wednesday" it was, in sober fact. Thus far, the city in general was ignorant of the tragedy which had taken place at the very conclusion of its gayest carnival season. Within a few hours business and social circles would be swept by the fact of Joseph Maillard's murder, but at this early point of the day the city slept. The morning papers, which today carried a news story that promised to shock and stun the entire community, were not yet distributed.

Rising before daylight, Henry Gramont and Hammond breakfasted early and were off by six in the car. They were well outside town and sweeping on their way to Terrebonne parish and the town of Paradis before they realized that the day was not going to brighten appreciably. Instead, it remained very cloudy and gloomy, with a chill threat of rain in the air.

Weather mattered little to Gramont. When finally the excellent highway was left behind, and they started on the last lap of their seventy-mile ride, they found the parish roads execrable and the going slow. Thus, noon was at hand when they at length pulled into Paradis, the town closest to Lucie Ledanois' bayou land. The rain was still holding off.

"Too cold to rain," observed Gramont. "Let's hit for the hotel and get something to eat. I'll have to locate the land, which is somewhere near town."

They discovered the hotel to be an ancient structure, and boasting prices worthy of Lafitte and his buccaneers. As in many small towns of Louisiana, however, the food proved fit for a king. After a light luncheon of quail, crayfish bisque, and probably illegal venison, Gramont sighed regret that he could eat no more, and set about inquiring where the Ledanois farm lay.

There was very little, indeed, to Paradis, which lay on the bayou but well away from the railroad. It was a desolate spot, unpainted and unkempt. The parish seat of Houma had robbed it of all life and growth on the one hand; on the other, the new oil and gas district had not yet touched it.

Southward lay the swamp—fully forty miles of it, merging by degrees into the Gulf. Forty miles of cypress marsh and winding bayou, uncharted, unexplored save by occasional hunters or semi-occasional sheriffs. No man knew who or what might be in those swamps, and no one cared to know. The man who brought in fish or oysters in his skiff might be a bayou fisherman, and he might be a murderer wanted in ten states. Curiosity was apt to prove extremely unhealthy. Like the Atchafalaya, where chance travelers find themselves abruptly ordered elsewhere, the Terrebonne swamps have their own secrets and know how to keep them.

Gramont had no difficulty in locating the Ledanois land, and he found that it was by no means in the swamp. A part of it, lying closer to Houma, had been sold and was now included in the new oil district; it was this portion which Joseph Maillard had sold off.

The remainder, and the largest portion, lay north of Paradis and ran along the west bank of the bayou for half a mile. A long-abandoned farm, it was high ground, with the timber well cleared off and excellently located; but tenants were hard to get and shiftless when obtained, so that the place had not been farmed for the last five years or more. After getting these facts, Gramont consulted with Hammond.

"We'd better buy some grub here in town and arrange to stay a couple of nights on the farm, if necessary," he said. "There are some buildings there, so we'll find shelter. Along the bayou are summer cottages—I believe some of them rather pretentious places—and we ought to find the road pretty decent. It's only three or four miles out of town."

With some provisions piled in the car, they set forth. The road wound along the bayou side, past ancient 'Cajun farms and the squat homes of fishermen. Here and there had been placed camps and summer cottages, nestling amid groups of huge oaks and cypress, whose fronds of silver-gray moss hung in drooping clusters like pale and ghostly shrouds.

Watching the road closely Gramont suddenly found the landmarks that had been described to him, and ordered Hammond to stop and turn in at a gap in the fence which had once been an entrance gate.

Before them, as they drove in from the road by a grass-covered drive, showed a house, shed, and barn amid a cluster of towering trees. Indeed, trees were everywhere about the farm, which had grown up in a regular sapling forest. The buildings were in a ruinous state—clapboards hanging loosely, roofs dotted by gaping holes, doors and windows long since gone.

Leaving the car, Gramont, followed by the chauffeur, went to the front doorway and surveyed the wreckage inside.

"What do you say, Hammond? Think we can stop here, or go back to the hotel? It's not much of a run to town—"

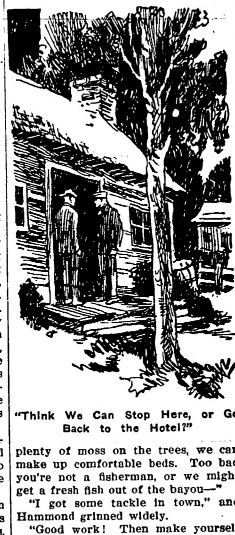
"I can get this shack cleaned out in about half an hour—this one room, anyhow. When we get a fire goin' in there, and board up the windows and doors, we ought to be comfortable enough. But suit yourself, cap'n! It's your funeral."

Gramont laughed. "All right. Go ahead and clean up, then, and if rain comes down we can camp here. Be sure and look for snakes and vermin. The floor seems sound, and if there's plenty of moss on the trees, we can make up comfortable beds. Too bad you're not a fisherman, or we might get a fresh fish out of the bayou—"



"Think We Can Stop Here, or Go Back to the Hotel?"

"I got some tackle in town," and Hammond grinned widely.

"Good work! Then make yourself at home and go to it. We've most of the afternoon before us."

He took a letter from his pocket, opened it, and glanced over it anew. It was an old letter, one written him nearly two years previously by Lucie Ledanois. It had been written merely in the endeavor to distract the thoughts of a wounded soldier, to bring his mind to Louisiana, away from the stricken fields of France. In the letter Lucie had described some of the more interesting features of Bayou Terrebonne—the oyster and shrimp fleets, the Chinese and Filipino villages along the gulf, the far-spread cypress swamps; the bubbling fountains, natural curiosities, that broke up through the streams and bayous of the whole wide parish—fountains that were caused by gas seeping up from the earth's interior, and breaking through.

Gramont knew that plans were already afoot to tap this field of natural gas and pipe it to New Orleans. Oil had been found too, and all the state was now oil-mad. Fortunes were being made daily, and other fortunes were being lost daily by those who dealt with oil stocks instead of with oil.

"Those gas fountains did the work!" reflected Gramont. "And according to this letter there's one of those fountains here in the bayou, close to her property, 'just opposite the dock' she says. The first thing is to find the dock, then the fountain. After that, we'll decide if it's true mineral gas. If it is, then the work's done—for I'll sure take a chance on finding oil near it!"

Gramont came to the bayou and began searching his way along the thick and high fringe of bushes and saplings that girded the water's edge. Presently he came upon the ruined evidences of what had once been a small boat shed. Not far from this he found the dock referred to in the letter; nothing was left of it except a few spiles protruding from the surface of the water. But he had no need to look farther. Directly before him, he saw that which he was seeking.

A dozen feet out from shore the water was rising and falling in a continuous dome or fountain of highly charged bubbles that rose a foot above the surface. Gramont stared at it, motionless. He watched it for a space—then, abruptly, he started. It was a violent start, a start of sheer amazement and incredulity.

He leaned forward, staring no longer at the gas dome, but at the water closer inshore. For a moment he thought that his senses had deceived him, then he saw that the thing was there indeed, there beyond any doubt—a very faint trace of iridescent light that played over the surface of the water.

Organizations to Approach Railroad Executives With Mediation Plans —Will Not Endanger Lives.

Washington.—Organizations not on strike got their attempts to mediate the strike of shopmen and othtr crafts in the transportation service back before President Harding and after a two and a half hour White House conference declared they intendtd to re-approach railroad executives.

L. E. Sheppard, president of the Order of Railroad Conductors, and spokesman for the entire group, declared on leaving the White House the striking unions would leave "their case in the hands" of himself and his advocates, while as to the sporadic walkouts of brotherhood members in various parts of the country, he said "the president does not intend to make any issue against men who leave unsafe engines."

Fight for Mediation.

"It has been much the same story. We have been discussing the whole situation from top to bottom, and now we are going to look for somebody to give us help in our mediation attempts," Mr. Sheppard declared.

"That means, some railroad executives not so tenacious of their points as those we have seen. We shall talk over the matter of who might help with all the union officials.

Won't Endanger Lives.

Reverting to the policy of his own union, Mr. Sheppard said that "officers of our order are on their way to get men back at any points where walkouts are not justifitd."

"Our orders are that men are to stay at work unless their lives are endangered," he added, "and to make an honest effort to maintain transportation service with equipmtnt that is safe."

An announcement of a similar nature was made by W. G. Lee, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, in Cleveland.

PEAT FIRES RAPIDLY GAINING

Governor Urges More Than Ordinary Care With Fires in Forests.

St. Paul, Minn.—With hundreds of peat fires rapidly gaining headway over large areas in northern Minnesota and menacing stands of timber and some settlers in the vicinity of Longville, Washkish and other northern and central Minnesota points, Gov. J. A. O. Preus appealed to travelers and settlers to use more than ordinary care with fires in the wooded areas.

Governor Preus, who is at Itasca park, communicated with W. T. Cox, state forester, who returned from a trip through the north woods and who reported that conditions never were worse for forest fires.

Fighters Unable to Stop Fires.

Reports from forest rangers stated that a settler's building was burned out north of Longville, but this could not be verified.

Many of the fires had already spread out and are running to high ground and have entered grass and woodland, gaining speed with which the forest fighters are unable to cope. Rangers, with the number of help obtainable, are unable to keep these fires within their own limits and if the present wind continues, large bodies of timber will fall before the fires.

Orders prohibiting the issuance of burning permits by forest officers or chairmen of town boards in central or northern Minnesota have been issued by Forester Cox and every available man in the forestry service has been ordered to the fire lines.

Permit Issue Restricted.

Governor Preus in his communication to Mr Cox, said he "had never seen conditions for fire as they are between Alexandria and Park Rapids." He asked Mr Cox to issue requests to settlers and travelers to "use more than ordinary care in starting fires that might spread into the timber or grass." The issue of permits will be restricted until the fires are extinguished or the conditions are safe, Mr Cox said.

The fires are the outcrop of the peat fires which have been smouldering since early spring.

Irish Rebels Storm Dundalk.

Belfast.—A large force of Republicans entered Dundalk taking the National garrison completely by surprise. The attack was successful and the town is now isolated with Republican troops patrolling the streets. The Anne street police headquarters which was occupied by the nationals was the first object to be stormed and taken. The garrison was captured. The jail was the next to fall and all prisoners who were mostly Republicans were liberated.

ALWAYS TIRED NO AMBITION

Nervous and Dizzy, Everything Seemed to Worry Me. How I Got Well

Larwill, Indiana.—"My back was so bad I could not do my washing. I was always tired out and had no ambition, was nervous and dizzy and everything seemed to worry me and I had awful pains in my right side. I felt badly about four years and could not do my work as it should have been done. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised so much and it did so many people good that I began to take it myself. I am feeling fine now and every one tells me they never saw me looking so well. I live on a farm, do all my work, and have three little girls to take care of. I am recommending this medicine to my friends and know it will help them if they use it like I do." — Mrs. HERBERT LONG, R. R. 3, Box 7, Larwill, Indiana.

Many women keep about their work when it is a great effort. They are always tired out and have no ambition. When you are in this condition give it prompt attention.

Take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, for it is especially adapted to correct such troubles, as it did for Mrs. Long.

Dream of Opulence.

A week before the Fourth of July, three-year-old Betty invested a quarter in fireworks, buying two boxes of victory snakes and a 15-cent package of sparklers. Every succeeding day she took them out and looked at them delightedly. On the morning of the Fourth, as she prepared to shoot them off, she said, wistfully: "Oh, muvver, I wisht I was a millionaire!"

"Well, Betty, why in the world do you wish that?" her mother asked.

"Why, if I was," exclaimed Betty, "I believe I'd jus' shoot off this very whole box of sparklers to once!"

Air Disarmament Completed.

Since January, 1920, the allied commission of aeronautical control has destroyed 14,800 airplanes, and the work of disarming Germany in the air is ended. Of the 29,500 motors handled, some have been turned over to the allies, but the greater number have been broken up.

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Canby—A little daughter of Herman Schutt, residing near Brandt, was severely injured about the legs when she was caught in a mower in use on the Schutt farm. She stepped in front of the mower.

Wabasso—The present summer is proving a banner one for building operations in Wabasso. At the present time a $60,000 high school building is in course of construction, and an extensive sewer system is also being installed. At a recent meeting of the Co-operative Creamery company, it was decided that a new building should be erected.

Montevideo—Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Eliason celebrated their golden wedding anniversary here. They had spent their entire half century of wedded life in Chippewa county.

Duluth—According to records in the office of the clerk of district court 19,000 pints or 2,377 gallons of banded whisky have been sold in St. Louis county under doctor's orders since Aug. 4, 1919.

Minneapolis — The Board of Estimate and Taxation will hold a special meeting to sell $1,000,000 of bonds for school purposes and $120,000 of bonds to finance sewer construction.

St. Paul—Thomas Aldan Abbott, for many years president of the firm of T. A. Abbott and Brothers, St. Paul, manufacturers of sash, doors and blinds, died at his home, 487 Ashland avenue, St. Paul. Mr. Abbott, who was 75 years old, had been ill for more than two years. He was president for some years of the State Humane Society.

Hibbing—The annual meeting and picnic of the Associated Italian Americanization clubs of Northern Minnesota will be held at Eveleth, Minn., August 20th. In case of rain the Eveleth hockey rink and municipal auditorium has been tendered the association. The city council of Eveleth has also offered the service of the Eveleth band.

Jordan—Mrs. John Ruppert, who, with her husband and son, Florian, were injured in an automobile accident near here, died without regaining consciousness. Physicians said death was due to a fractured skull.

New Prague—This city is to lose the International Milling Co., which announced its removal to Minneapolis in the early future. Several families and single employees will go with the moving of the general offices.

Mankato, Minn.—Completion of the new armory of the Minnesota National Guard was celebrated here by a crowd that taxed the capacity of the auditorium of the building. Gov. Preus was the principal speaker.

Excelsior—Three thousand members of Zuhrah Temple, Order of the Mystic Shrine, attended the annual picnic of the organization at Spring Park, Lake Minnetonka. Many state officials and out-of-town Shriners were included among the guests.

Austin—August Detloff, held in the county jail for the murder of Mr. and Mrs. John Wagner at Grand Meadow, spends most of his time walking up and down the corridor. Once a day he is allowed the company of a prisoner who is spending 30 days in the jail. Detloff asked for a copy of the New Testament.

Red Wing—Martin Erickson of White Rock was sentenced by Judge S. J. Nelson to 10 days in jail for driving an automobile while intoxicated and for 30 days more for transporting liquor. Andrew Johnson of this city who was riding with Erickson when the latter was arrested, drew 15 days in jail for resisting arrest.

Winona—The extent to which pigs are commonly kicked by farmers to keep them out of the trough at feeding time was argued in municipal court here. Roy Geltie, 17 year old farmhand, charged Frank Pruka, his employer, with assault because the farmer thrashed him for kicking the pigs. The court found Pruka not guilty.

Minneapolis—Completion of the Zion Lutheran church, Lyndale and Twenty-sixth avenue north, was celebrated by the congregation with special services. Rev. H. G. Stub, president of the Norwegian Lutheran church of America preached the principal sermon, and an address also was delivered by the pastor, Rev. B. E. Bergesen.

Red Wing—A plague of rats has become so serious here in the business district that the Chamber of Commerce has named a committee to consider the best means of exterminating them. Special Care of Baby.

That Baby should have a bed of its own all are agreed. Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for Infants and Children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this:—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

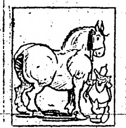
$2,500,000 FAIR PROGRAM READY

Greatest Exposition Ever Staged in World Promised on Sept. 2 to 9.

A score of fairs within a fair—that is what the great Minnesota State Fair, Twin Cities, September 2 to 9, will be this year.

In point of entries and in quality of exhibits, this year's fair will function as an international exhibition More than 260 acres of exhibits, valued at more than $2,500,000, will be presented by the biggest and best educational fair ever staged in the Northwest.



No other fair or exposition staged in America this year is offering as much money for prizes and premiums as the Minnesota State Fair will pay to winners in the many exhibits and contests on the program. One hundred and twenty-eight thousand, four hundred and forty-nine dollars in prizes is offered by the fair management—about $7,000 more than was offered in 1921, when winners in many contests divided $121,817.00.

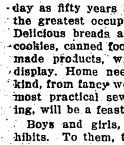
A livestock show that will not be excelled anywhere in the country will feature the coming fair. The fair has offered $59,905.00 in premiums for livestock exhibits. The remarkable interest that has been shown in the cattle show this year presages the finest collection of animals that has ever graced a show at the fair. So many entries have been received by the management that the new mammoth cattle barn erected recently at a cost of $500,000.00—and which was thought big enough to take care of the needs of the cattle department for years to come—will prove inadequate to house all of the animals which will be exhibited.

Especially interesting will be the exhibit of dairy cattle. No other industry has enjoyed such wonderful growth in recent years as has dairying. The stocking of farms with purebred dairy cattle has proceeded at so rapid a rate that scrub animals are becoming fewer and fewer on farms throughout the Northwest. That prosperity follows the dairy cow was proved to farmers and breeders many times the past two years, when the Northwest remained one of the most prosperous agricultural sections in the entire country.

Both the swine and the sheep shows will be larger than ever. Nearly 1,000 head of swine will be exhibited for the $7,110.00 in premiums offered. For the sheep contests, the fair is offering $4,470.

The agricultural building, with its inspiring exhibits of grains, grasses and vegetables of all descriptions, will be a veritable paradise to visitors interested in farm crops. Counties of the state will vie with each other in their arrangement of attractive displays from our 1922 "Billion Dollar Harvest." Nearly $20,000.00 in cash prizes will be paid out for winning exhibits.

The thousands of plants and flowers, and heaping displays of fruits and vegetables, will convert the horticultural building into a veritable fairyland. Luscious plums, rosy-cheeked apples, shapely pears and peaches, and delicious strawberries and grapes, will peep out at visitors from long rows of exhibits. Beautiful flowers and shrubs, rich in color and design, will draw out numerous "Ah's" and "Oh's" from passers by.



The greatest barnyard chorus of the year will be heard in the poultry show, where more than 2,000 birds will be shown. The prize winning birds will be given premiums of $2,967.00.

The women will come into their own at the fair. An entire building with an annex has been set aside for exhibits of canning, sewing and baking. Women's exhibits will prove to all that interest in home-making is as great today as fifty years ago, still making it the greatest occupation in the world. Delicious breads and cakes, pies and cookies, canned foods and other home-made products, will be on tempting display. Home needle work of every kind, from fancy work and laces to the most practical sewing and dressmaking, will be a feast for women's souls.

Boys and girls, too, will have exhibits. To them, the fair is to be an "Achievement Week." It will give them a chance to show their parents and friends what they have learned in school, and what they are getting out of their enrollment in Boys' and Girls' Club Work. There will be team demonstrations of all kinds by boys and girls, showing how expert they have become in bread making, in sewing, canning, and in the judging of livestock.

Record Cattle Show at State Fair.

The biggest cattle show ever staged in the middle west will feature the Minnesota State Fair, Twin Cities, September 2 to 9. More than 1,000 head of cattle will be exhibited on the main floor of the $500,000 Cattle Barn. Premiums amounting to $24,773.00 have been put up by the State Fair.

The stock of the Middle River Hardware Co., has been sold to Anton Yngve of Minneapolis who will increase the present stock.

Minnesota always has one of the very best state fairs. The big fair will be held this year from Sept. 2nd to 9th. Take in this fair.

STATE FAIR TO THRILL 500.000

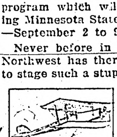
Action! Speed! Thrills!

These three words—in a nut shell—describe the $100,000.00 entertainment program which will feature the coming Minnesota State Fair—Twin Cities—September 2 to 9.

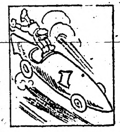
Never before in the history of the Northwest has there been an attempt to stage such a stupendous amusement bill as will be presented each day at the State Fair. So many novel features have been engaged that visitors will be dazzled.



Exciting horse races; thrilling automobile races; a spectacular aerial circus; twenty-five big vaudeville acts; a gorgeous fireworks spectacle; auto polo, pigeon races, horseshoe pitching, a midway with twenty big attractions, and a dozen big bands and orchestras will be among the leading features on the program.

Auto polo, ranked by many as the most thrilling of all sports, will be the daily feature at both the afternoon and evening shows. Two of the leading auto polo teams of the country will furnish the excitement—and spills!

A slip of a school girl, just turning 18, Miss Lillian Boyer, of Chicago, will headline the aerial circus, which bears her name. Miss Boyer is the only woman who successfully changes from a speeding automobile to a low-flying airplane, with both car and "ship" going at 60 miles an hour. Miss Boyer is alone in her field, and is regarded as the greatest woman aviatrix and acrobat of all time. Since the death of Lieutenant Louis James, killed recently while making a change, Miss Boyer is the only person performing the stunt today.



With Miss Boyer will be two of the best known aviators to see service in the recent war, Billy Brock and Jimmie Faulkner. These daring birdmen will assist Miss Boyer in all her dizzy stunts.

As part of the evening show, Pilots Brock and Faulkner will stage an aerial battle. Using specially constructed planes, illuminated by fireworks, they will bomb the fair and perform other hair-raising maneuvers depicting modern warfare.

Lovers of harness horse racing will enjoy themselves to the limit on four days, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, September 4, 5, 7 and 8. More than 400 horses have been entered in various events, and the best racing in years is forecost. The management is offering $22,000 in purses, with added money, which means the horsemen will carry away at least $30,000.

The world's fastest automobile—the Wisconsin Special, built in Minneapolis last fall—will be seen in the big automobile races that have been carded for three days of the fair. Sig. Haugdahl, the blond Scandinavian speed king, who piloted his freak machine over the Daytona Beach course faster than three miles a minute, will go after all records, including the world's circular dirt track record, with his new car.

Haugdahl set the world's record with his Fiat car at the Minnesota State Fair last year when he made the mile in 46⅘ seconds. Haugdahl has sent word to the State Fair officials that he is having his car thoroughly overhauled for the meet. He declares that he will cut several seconds from this record with his powerful 300 horse power airplane motor, when he cuts loose. The car was designed by Haugdahl, and differs in appearance from other types of machines. It is only 18 inches wide, and wind resistance and vacuum have been reduced to a minimum.

In addition to Haugdahl, a score of other leading dirt track drivers of the country will compete for the $10,000.00 in purses offered by the fair.

The vaudeville and circus program will be a stunner. So many acts will be going on in front of the grandstand that patrons will grow dizzy trying to watch the many performers at the same time.

Bands and orchestras galore will dispense music. Al Sweet's Singing Band, one of the foremost concert organizations in the country, will be brought to the fair from New York. The Duluth First American Legion Band, the crack doughboy band which won premier laurels at the American Legion convention in Kansas City, will appear the entire week. Other bands include the Minnesota State Band, the Spring Grove Band, Bemidji Boys' Band, and the Sanborn cornet and reed band.

1,000 Children to Exhibit.

More than 1,000 children will compete in the Boys' and Girls' club contests at the coming Minnesota State Fair, Twin Cities, September 2 to 9, according to T. A. Erickson, State club leader. Prizes totaling $11,000.00 are offered by the State Fair management.

WORN OUT AFTER SHE COOKED A MEAL

Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—Read the Result

Cincinnati, Ohio.—"I suffered for a year with nervous troubles and irregularities before I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. My back pained all the time and I was unfit for housework. I was worn out if I cooked a meal, and was unable to do my washing. My girl friends and my sister told me if I would take your Vegetable Compound and Liver Pills I would be relieved. After taking the first bottle I felt better, and neglected it awhile, but found I could not do my work until I was stronger. So I took the Vegetable Compound again and now I am the mother of a 19 months old boy. He is fat and healthy and I am sure I could never have carried him if it had not been for your Vegetable Compound. I recommend your medicine to all women although I am young to be advising some one older."—Mrs. CHRIST. PETROFF, 318 W. Liberty St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

His heart pounded violently; excitement sent the blood rushing to his brain in blinding swirls. He was gripped by the gold fever that comes upon a man when he makes the astounding discovery of untold wealth lying at his feet, passed over and disregarded by other and less-discerning men for days and years!

It was oil, no question about it. An extremely slight quantity, true; so slight a quantity that there was no film on the water, no discernible taste to the water. Gramont brought it to his mouth and rose, shaking his head.

Where did it come from? It had no connection with the gas bubbles—at least, it did not come from the dome of water and gas. How long he stood there staring Gramont did not know. His brain was afire with the possibilities. At length he stirred into action and started up the bayou bank, from time to time halting to search the water below him, to make sure that he could still discern the faint iridescence.

He followed it rod by rod, and found that it rapidly increased in strength. It must come from some very tiny surface seepage close at hand, that was lost in the bayou almost as rapidly as it came from the earth-depths. Only accidentally would a man see it—not unless he were searching the water close to the bank, and even then only by the grace of chance.

Suddenly Gramont saw that he had lost the sign. He halted.

No, not lost, either! Just ahead of him was a patch of reeds, and a recession of the shore. He advanced again. Inside the reeds he found the oily smear, still so faint that he could only detect it at certain angles. Glancing up, he could see a fence at a little distance, evidently the boundary fence of the Ledanois land; the bushes and trees thinned out here, and on ahead was cleared ground. He saw, through the bushes, glimpses of buildings.

Violent disappointment seized him. Was he to lose this discovery, after all? Was he to find that the seepage came from ground belonging to some one else? No—he stepped back hastily, barely in time to avoid stumbling into a tiny trickle of water, a rivulet that ran down into the bayou, a tributary so insignificant that it was invisible ten feet distant! And on the surface a faint iridescence.

Excitement rising anew within him, Gramont turned and followed this rivulet, his eyes aflame with eagerness. It led him for twenty feet, and ceased abruptly, in a bubbling spring that welled from a patch of low tree-inclosed land. Gramont felt his feet sinking in grass, and saw that there was a dip in the ground hereabouts, a swampy little section all to itself. He picked a dry spot and lay down on his face, searching the water with his eyes.

Moment after moment he lay there, watching. Presently he found the slight trickle of oil again—a trickle so faint and slim that even here, on the surface of the tiny rivulet, it could be discerned only with great difficulty. A very thin seepage, concluded Gramont: a thin oil, of course. So faint a little thing, to mean so much!

It came from the Ledanois land, no doubt of it. What did that matter, though? His eyes widened with flaming thoughts as he gazed down at the slender thread of water. No matter at all where this came from—the main point was proven by it! There was oil here for the finding, oil down in the thousands of feet below, oil so thick and abundant that it forced itself up through the earth fissures to find an outlet!

"Instead of going down five or six thousand feet," he thought, exultantly, "we may have to go down only as many hundred. But first we must get an option or a lease on all the land roundabout—all we can secure! There will be a tremendous boom the minute this news breaks. If we get those options, we can sell them over again at a million per cent profit, and even if we don't strike oil in paying quantities, we'll regain the cost of our drilling! And to think of the years this has been here, waiting for some one—"

Suddenly he started violently. An abrupt crashing of feet among the bushes, an outbreak of voices, had sounded not far away—just the other side of the boundary fence. He was wakened from his dreams, and started to rise. Then he relaxed his muscles and lay quiet, astonishment seizing him; for he heard his own name mentioned in a voice that was strange to him.

CHAPTER X.

The voice was strange to Gramont, yet he had a vague recollection of having at some time heard it before. It was a jaunty and impudent voice, very self-assured—yet it bore a startled and uneasy note, as though the speaker had just come unaware upon the man whom he addressed.

"Howdy, sheriff!" it said. "Didn't see you in there—what you doin' so far away from Houma, eh?"

"Why, I've been looking over the place around here," responded another voice, which was dry and grim. "I know you, Ben Chacherre, and I think I'll take you along with me. Just come from New Orleans, did you?"

"Me? Take me?" The voice of Chacherre shrilled up suddenly in alarm. "Look here, sheriff, it wasn't me done it! It was Gramont—"

There came silence. Not a sound broke the stillness of the late afternoon.

Gramont, listening, lay bewildered and breathless. Ben Chacherre come here? Gramont knew nothing of any tie between Jachin, Fell and Chacherre; he could only lie in the grass and wonder at the man's presence. What "place" was it that the sheriff of Houma had been looking over? And what was it that he, Gramont, was supposed to have done?

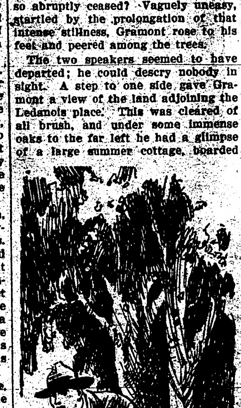
Confused and wondering, Gramont waited. And, as he waited, he caught a soft sound from the marshy ground beside him—a faint "plop" as though some object had fallen close by on the wet grass. At the moment he paid no heed to this sound, for again the uncanny silence had fallen.

Listening, Gramont fancied that he caught slow, stealthy footsteps amid the undergrowth, but derided the fancy as sheer imagination. His brain was busy with this new problem. Houma, he knew, was the seat of the parish or county. This Ben Chacherre appeared to have suddenly and unexpectedly encountered the sheriff, to his obvious alarm, and the sheriff had for some reason decided to arrest him; so much was clear.

Chacherre had nothing to do with the "place"—did that mean the adjacent property, or the Ledanois farm? In his puzzled bewilderment over this imbroglio, Gramont for the moment quite forgot the trickle of oil at his feet.

But now the deep silence became unnatural and sinister. What had happened? Surely, Ben Chacherre had not been arrested and taken away in such silence! Why had the voices so abruptly ceased? Vaguely uneasy, startled by the prolongation of that intense stillness, Gramont rose to his feet and peered among the trees.

The two speakers seemed to have departed; he could descry nobody in sight. A step to one side gave Gramont a view of the land adjoining the Ledanois place. This was cleared of all brush, and under some immense oaks to the far left he had a glimpse of a large summer cottage, boarded up and apparently deserted. Nearer at hand, however, he saw other buildings, and these drew his attention. He heard the throbbing pound of a motor at work, and as there was no power line along here, the place evidently had its own electrical plant. He scrutinized the scene before him appraisingly.



An Abrupt Crashing of Feet Among the Bushes, an Outbreak of Voices, Had Sounded Not Far Away.

There were two large buildings here. One seemed to be a large barn, closed, the other was a long, low shed which was too large to be a garage. The door of this was open, and before the opening Gramont saw three men standing in talk; he recognized none of them. Two of the talkers were clad in greasy overalls, and the third figure showed the flash of a collar. The sheriff, Ben Chacherre, and some other man, thought Gramont. He would not have known Chacherre had he encountered him face to face. To him, the man was a name only.

The mention of his own name by Chacherre impelled him to go forward and demand some explanation. Then it occurred to him that perhaps he had made a mistake; it would have been very easy, for he was not certain that Chacherre had referred to him. There could be other Gramonts, or other men whose name would have much the same sound in a Creole mouth.

"I'd better attend to my own business," thought Gramont, and turned away. He noticed that the motor had ceased its work. "Wonder what rich chap can be down here at his summer cottage this time of year? May be only a caretaker, though. I'd better give all my attention to this oil, and let other things alone."

He retraced his steps to the bayou bank and turned back toward the house. As he did so, Hammond appeared coming toward him, knife in hand.

"I'm going to cut me a pole and land a couple o' fish for supper," announced the chauffeur, grinning. "Got things cleaned up fine, cap'n! You won't know the old shack."

"Good enough," said Gramont. "Here, step over this way! I want to show you something."

He led Hammond to the rivulet and pointed out the thin film of oil on the surface.

"There's our golden fortune, sergeant! Oil actually coming out of the ground! It doesn't happen very often, but it does happen and this is one of the times. I'll not bother to look around any farther."

"Glory be!" said Hammond, staring at the rivulet. "Want to hit back for tow[illegible]

"No; we couldn't get back until some time tonight, and the roads aren't very good for night work. I'm going to get some leases around here—perhaps I can do it right away, and we'll start back in the morning. Go ahead and get your fish."

Regaining the house, he saw that Hammond had indeed cleaned up in great style, and had the main room looking clean as a pin, with a fire popping on the hearth. He did not pause here, but went to the car, got in, and started it. He drove back to the road and followed this toward town for a few rods, turning in at a large and very decent-looking farmhouse that he had observed while passing it on the way out.

He found the owner, an intelligent-appearing Creole, driving in some cows for milking, and was a little startled to realize that the afternoon was so late. When he addressed the farmer in French, he received a cordial reply, and discovered that this man owned the land across the road from the Ledanois place—that his farm, in fact, covered several hundred acres.

"Who owns the land next to the Ledanois place?" inquired Gramont.

"I sold that off my land a couple of years ago," replied the other. "A man from New Orleans wanted it for a summer place—a business man there, Isidore Gumberts."

Gumberts—"Memphis Izzy" Gumberts! The name flashed to Gramont's mind, and brought the recollection of a conversation with Hammond. Why, Gumberts was the famous crook of whom Hammond had spoken.

"I saw the sheriff a while ago, heading up the road," observed the Creole. "Did you meet him?"

Gramont shook his head. "No, but I saw several men at the Gumberts place. Perhaps he was there—"

"Not there, I guess," and the farmer laughed. "Those fellows have rented the place from Gumberts, I hear; they're inventors, and quiet enough men. You're a stranger here?"

Gramont introduced himself as a friend of Miss Ledanois, and stated frankly that he was looking for oil and hoped to drill on her land.

"I'd like a lease option from you," he went on. "I don't want to buy your land at all; what I want is a right to drill for oil on it, in case any shows up on Miss Ledanois' land. It's all a gamble, you know. I'll give you a hundred dollars for the lease, and the usual eighth interest in any oil that's found. I've no lease blanks with me, but if you'll give me the option, a signed memorandum will be entirely sufficient."

The farmer regarded oil as a joke, and said so. The hundred dollars, however, and the prospective eighth interest, were sufficient to induce him to part with the option without any delay. He was only too glad to get the thing done with at once, and to pocket Gramont's money.

Gramont drove away, and was just coming to the Ledanois drive when he suddenly threw on the brakes and halted the car, listening. From somewhere ahead of him—the Gumberts place, he thought instantly—echoed a shot, and several faint shouts. Then silence again.

Gramont paused, indecisive. The sheriff was making an arrest, he thought. A hundred possibilities flitted through his brain, suggested by the sinister combination of Memphis Izzy, known even to Hammond as a prince among crooks, with this secluded place leased by "inventors." Bootlegging? Counterfeiting?

As he paused, thus, he suddenly started; he was certain that he had caught the tones of Hammond, as though in a sudden uplifted oath of anger. Gramont threw in his clutch and sent the car jumping forward—he remembered that he had left Hammond beside the rivulet, close to the Gumberts property. What had happened?

He came, after a moment of impatience, to an open gate whose drive led to the Gumberts place. Before him, as he turned in, unfolded a startling scene. Three men, the same three whom he had seen from the bushes, were standing in front of the low shed; two of them held rifles, the third, one of the "inventors" in overalls, was winding a bandage about a bleeding hand. The two rifles were loosely leveled at Hammond, who stood in the center of the group with his arms in the air.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Winona—Pieces of ivory, which are parts of an elephant's tusk, have been found in a gravel pit near here indicating that the body of an elephant was buried there thousands of years ago.

Minneapolis — Corcian Canadian, aged 36, a car repairman employed by the Milwaukee railroad, fell from the roof of a boxcar near Twenty-eighth street and Minnehaha avenue and broke both legs.

Chatfield—Guy Empy, aged 88, a great-great-grandfather, has just purchased an automobile. He declares he is going to learn to drive the "contraption." Mr. Empy has 22 great-grandchildren and 4 great-great-grandchildren.

St. Paul—Poultry dealers and breeders met in St. Paul, to discuss plans for an international poultry show to take place in the Twin Cities in connection with the National Dairy show, Oct. 7 to 14.

Duluth—Public schools of Duluth and scores of downtown office buildings, will face complete shutdowns this winter unless coal receipts are quickly speeded up and the production at the mines gets under way.

Moorhead—Miss Sarah Wolfe won the $500 scholarship in the Minneapolis Art institute as a prize for the best drawing submitted in a high school contest.

Winona—The Shrine club of Caledonia entertained 400 Masons of Caledonia and neighboring towns at a picnic on the grounds of the Caledonia hospital.

Beulah—Mr. Thompson, crossing tender, fell heir to a fruit farm near Beulah, Mich., and resigned to take charge of the 40 acre tract, valued at more than $25,000.

Hibbing—George Wood, local game warden, is in a local hospital recovering from injuries received when he went to the shack of a settler to arrest him for game violations.

St. Paul—Coal on its way to Minnesota is being held at prices double the Hoover price of $3.50, the federal fuel administrator was informed in a message from Ivan Bowen.

Lake City—Funeral services for Joseph Merritt Underwood, president of the Jewell Nursery Company, of this city, who died at his home here, were held at St. Marytin's Episcopal church.

Shakopee—J. W. Black of Minneapolis is the president of two new state banks. Charters were granted to the Shakopee State bank at Shakopee and the Marshall County State bank at Holt, Minnesota.

Eveleth—Three girls of Eveleth, who left their homes on Sunday, August 6, are still being sought. They are Jennie Lindstrom, 15; Tillie Mayerle, 16, and Ina Makinen, 17. On the morning they disappeared they were going to a picnic.

Bemidji—Dorothy Borgen, aged 9, was badly injured when she was struck on the head by a maul swung by a patron of a strength-testing machine at the Northern Minnesota fair.

Madison—A fire in the oatfields of Martin Hanson, a mile east of here, burned a large quantity of grain. Investigation has shown only one cause, a small piece of glass, which may have focused the sun's rays on one spot long enough to start the fire.

Winona—C. Morgan, an itinerant solicitor, was being held by Winona police pending investigation of his activities in obtaining money from hundreds of persons for a book, the "Bubble," which he asserts he intends to publish.

Duluth—John C. Davis, former chief of police and first city controller of Duluth, died at his home here. Davis, who was 64 years old, had been a resident of Duluth since 1881.

Austin—The University of Southern Minnesota at Austin has arranged a "get acquainted picnic" for students to take place shortly after the opening of the fall term.

Itasca—Porcupines are girdling many trees within Itasca state park, killing them so that they have to be cut to save the timber. State Forester W. T. Cox says that 1,100,000 feet of timber was cut from the state land last winter, about one third of which had been girdled.

Minneapolis—O. P. B. Jacobson, state railroad and warehouse commissioner, notified the Interstate Commerce Commission that the states of Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota will require 260,000 cars for the shipment of potatoes and grain this fall.

Minneapolis—Steps towards the organization of an art club whose purpose will be the encouragement of young artists of the twin cities has been taken.

Minneapolis—Rapid growth of extension work of the University of Minneosta in the last several years has resulted in opening of offices at 312 Security building. F. C. Austin is resident manager.

Albert Lea—A storm which struck this section of the state did much damage to crops and the entire east wall, 100 feet in length, of the Odd Fellows building, in the course of construction here, was blown down.

Duluth—The third child to die in a motor accident in 16 hours in Duluth occured, when Robert, the five-year old son of Arthur Carlson was killed.

St. Paul—Minnesota took the lead as the hottest place in the United States and although St. Paul was not the point, it stood well to the front. The palm went to Campbell, Minn., with 99 degrees.

Stomach Trouble Had Him Nearly Past Going, Declares Mowrer.

"Tanlac has helped me to gain ten pounds," said J. E. Mowrer, 157 Park St., Akron, O., well-known railroad man.

"My stomach was in such bad fix that for several days at a time I could hardly retain any food. I had no appetite and often the very sight of food made me sick. I was intensely nervous, too, could not rest at night, felt tired and worn out all the time, and lost weight and strength until I was almost a wreck.

We had been living in the suburbs for five years, and had just moved back to the same house that we had lived in before. Our little girl, who is six years old, was saying "that she was borned in this house."

Her little brother said he was, too. Sister said, "No, you were in heaven then."

"If I was," John retorted, "I don't remember of seeing Jesus."—Chicago Journal.

Strong Rear Axle Gears of the New Superior

CHEVROLET

for Economical Transportation

One of the many reasons why the New Superior Chevrolet is outselling all other makes of standard automobiles is the high-grade equipment it offers in a low-priced car.

A leading feature of this equipment is the spiral bevel rear axle gears. They represent the best modern automobile engineering practice. The gears are so designed that two teeth of the pinion gear are always engaged with the ring gear, greatly increasing the strength of the set, and eliminating the noise common to the old type of straight tooth gear.

The New Superior Model Chevrolet has so many superior features that we invite comparisons, because comparisons sell Chevrolets.

RAIL EXECUTIVES ARE WEAKENING

Trainmen At Donville Ken'ucky On Southern Division Give Notice Of Walkout.

U. S. TROOPS ON GUARD

Louisville, Ky.—Official notice of a walkout of the "big four" brotherhoods of trainmen on the western division of the Southern Railway company from Danville, Ky., to St. Louis, Mo., was received by officials of the company here following a second strike of firemen at Princeton, Ind. Orders were given for the annullment of trains between Louisville and St. Louis until further notice.

Washington—Rapidly growing deterioration in railroad equipment, threatening paralysis of transportation, is causing leading rail executives who wanted to fight to the finish in the shopmen's strike, to adopt a conciliatory attitude, according to information to government officials.

This is one of the main facts underlying the hopes in administration circles that a settlement of the strike soon will be reached.

Railroad workers on strike are "fighting the fight of all workers" and "should have all the moral and financial assistance which the labor movement can give them," a statement issued by the executive council of the American Federation of Labor declared.

Salisbury, N. C.—All the eight companies of troops sent here last week on account of the tense situation developed from the strike of 1,700 workers in the Southern railway shops at Spencer, three miles north of here, were placed on guard duty at the shops and the Salisbury postoffice.

BONUS BILL TAKEN UP AGAIN

N. D. Legionaires Confident of Passage of Soldiers Bonus Bill.

Fargo.—Officers high in the circles of the North Dakota department of the American Legion, can see no reason why the impending action on the bonus bill will not result in its passage.

"Congress has awakened to the justice of the adjusted compensation measure and the bill will pass, although the New York interests will put up a hard fight to prevent it," J. P. Williams, state adjutant of the Legion said in regard to the legislation.

State Legion officials are hesitant to state their opinions as to the disposal of the measure if sent to President Harding.

Washington — Senate Republican leaders continued negotiations for a unanimous consent agreement for a final senate vote on the soldiers' bonus bill, but apparently with little prospect of immediate success. Some progress was reported, but it was understood that four or five senators objected to an agreement at this time.

COAL STRIKE NEARING END

Operators Insist on Old Wage Scale and Long Term Contract.

Washington—A determined filibuster to delay legislation requested by President Harding for meeting the industrial upheaval was launched by a group of Democrats in the house.

Representative Huddleston of Alabama, Democrat, demanded a roll call as soon as the house was called to order and followed it through with repeated points of "no quorum" when Republicans sought to take up for consideration legislation on the unanimous consent calendar.

The filibuster may delay but cannot prevent action on the president's program since Republicans have mustered enough members to guarantee a quorum.

Harding's Strike Speech Held Unfair.

President Harding's address to congress dealing with industrial troubles was characterized in the house by Representative Huddleston, Democrat, Alabama, as "an unfair, unjust and prejudiced statement" against working men who had "used the strike, the only instrument known to them."

Mr. Huddleston declared that working people felt they had been dealt with "unjustly." He added that the president's speech was calculated to "irritate the other side" and insisted that "the president stay inside the constitution."

Forest Fires Under Control.

Duluth, Minn.—With the forest fire situation reported well in hand, a concentrated effort was begun by forest rangers and others to reduce the menace of peat bog fires which been mainly responsible for the early season fires in the woods in northern Minnesota. Armed with 500 shovels, the rangers were digging in the peat bogs to get at the main source of these fires and then pour water into them with the aid of pumps.

MR. DINGLE'S SOOTHING SIRUP

Surely No Excuse for His Better Half's Nervousness After That Reassuring Speculation.

Mrs. Dingle was filled with nervous alarms whenever she traveled, and Mr. Dingle always had his hands full in trying to quiet and reassure her.

"Albert," said Mrs. Dingle, waking her husband from a sound sleep in a southern railway car. "Albert! I want you to find out why we are going at this fearful speed. The car is bumping and swaying till I can scarcely see out of my eyes."

Mr. Dingle sat up and looked out of the window at the moonlit landscape.

"See that bridge ahead on the curve?" he asked sleepily. "Well, we have to go over that in a minute, and probably it isn't very strong and they want to go over it with as little strain and as quickly as possible. Now go to sleep."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Just Plain Lonesome.

One day last week the young husband had occasion to go over to the West side. On the street he saw a young woman and behind her a crying child of about three years. The woman turned and in an impatient tone demanded: "What are you crying about?" The tot, looking up, replied: "I want a tiss." The woman bent down and gave the desired kiss. Thereupon the tears were dried and the world was again full of sunshine and gladness.—Chicago Journal.

Frenchman Predicts That in Near Future the Trip Can Be Made in Forty-Nine Hours.

M. Esnault-Pelterie of the Paris Aero club predicts that the utilization of the intra-atomic energy will enable men in the near future to travel from the earth to the moon in 49 hours. The first 31 minutes, it seems, will be very agreeable, but during the 48 hours and 29 minutes of the second part of the course one will have the sensation of a terrible fall in the void.

One morning when standing at the window he perceived a human body falling through the air.

"How do you do?" asked Mark Twain gracefully.

"So far," the other replied, "I'm all right. But when I reach the ground floor it will be all wrong!"

Up-to-Date Youngster.

Whether the generations advance or not may be undecided, but they certainly change. Recently a Portland mother explained to her early-teen son that certain guns and baseball equipment and radio addenda could not be bought, as the family exchequer was limited and "Daddy has to work hard to get the money we live on and we have to make it go a long way." In "daddy's" Sunday school books, of course, the boy would have said: "Then, my dear mamma, cannot my next suit be made from papa's old seatless troussers?" or "Next Christmas, my dear mamma, I shall do without lollipops." But this Western-American, Twenty-first-century lambkin replied:

KELLOGG REVIEWS FARM LEGISLATION

Cites What Has Been Done and What Should Be Done.

Walnut Grove, Minn.—Senator Frank B. Kellogg told a meeting of 1,000 farmers at this place what the present administration had done for agriculture since March 4, 1921, and outlined what plans were being considered for farming interests in the future.

Farming the Basic Industry.

"All history," said the speaker, "shows that a nation founded upon an intelligent, independent and prosperous farming community where the people are proprietors of the soil, secure in their rights and with hope of progress, is a nation rising in the tide of civilization. The farmer's work is the basic industry. He takes the greatest risks, and today I believe his returns are the smallest, though his position in the world is secure."

List of Achievements.

Reviewing the legislation and executive action of the present Congress in aid of the farmer, Senator Kellogg enumerated the following:

The emergency tariff law for the benefit of agriculture, which placed a tariff duty on farm products.

The law extending the powers of the War Finance corporation so as to relieve the credit situation among the farmers and provide a foreign market for their products.

Law appropriating $35,000,000 to aid the Federal Farm Loan banks to sell bonds at 5½ per cent without any increase in the rate of interest to the farmer.

The packer control law.

The law regulating future trading in grain.

Bill authorizing the president to appoint a representative of agriculture on the Federal Reserve Board.

Federal aid in the construction of highways, from which Minnesota has been benefitted to the extent of many millions of dollars, thus relieving rural taxpayers of a considerable burden.

The senator stated that he had introduced many of the bills which congress had adopted for the benefit of farmers and that he had supported and voted for the entire agricultural program.

Minn. Farmers Get $22,000,000.

A year and a half ago the Federal Farm Loan Banks were practically at a standstill. Congress appropriated $35,000,000 for their use and now he said these banks are now loaning to their fullest capacity. In Minnesota alone since the banks resumed business in June 1921, $7,179,700 has been loaned, and $3,597,700 by the Joint Stock Bank."

"The bill which I introduced," he said, "and which became a law, extended the life of the Finance Corporation for one year, and provides that in order to create a market for farm products and to carry such products until they are sold the corporation is authorized to make loans. The corporation has a capital of $500,000,000, and is authorized to borrow a billion dollars more. The total loans up to the first of July in Minnesota amounted to $11,912,730."

Farm Bureau's Work Lauded.

"One of the most important bills passed by the last congress in aid of the farmers," he said, "was the co-operative marketing bill. I had the honor of having charge of this bill before the senate. In this and in other work for the farmers, senator Kellogg co-operated with the various farm bureaus and organizations, and he spoke in terms of the highest praise regarding their efficiency and fairness.

Farmers' Emergency Tariff Act.

The senator stated that a year and a half ago practically all farm products were on the free list, and pointed out that when at the close of the war the demands of the allies for food ceased, Canada, Cuba and Argentine dumped their products upon our unprotected markets. The emergency tariff stopped the flood of foreign farm products and prevented the prices of farm products falling to a still lower level.

Controlling Cattle and Grain Markets.

He referred to the fact that he had supported legislation for the control of the packing industry and the statute which forbids the trading in futures in the grain markets. These regulatory laws were a part of the farm bloc program.

Saved $7,000,000 Minnesota Road Fund.

When the first appropriation for road building was proposed by the government, Minnesota's constitution would not permit the acceptance of money from any source for "internal improvements." A law fathered by Senator Kellogg, held Minnesota's share of this money in the federal treasury until our constitution had been amended, and thus saved for our taxpayers neary $7,000,000.

Lower Freight Rates.

"One of the vital needs of the farmer is cheaper transportation. Railroad rates are too high."

"I therefore favor the development of the great Lakes to ocean canal for water transportation is the cheapest after all. Thirty-four miles of canal will bring the ocean to Duluth and add millions of dollars to our farm products every year."

"One thing must be understood—that the law is above every man and that every individual must be protected in his right to labor and to enjoy the fruits of his industry."

Ole Johnson and sister Inga visited in Badger and Roseau Sunday.

Miss Maude Forsythe came Wednesday for a short visit at the home of her sister, Mrs. Sanoden.

Mrs. A. L. Carlson of Crookston came last week Thursday to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Wegge.

Miss Laura Gunderson of Grand Forks and a lady friend came Tuesday night to visit the formers aunt, Mrs. Hjalmer Johnson.

We are pleased to report that Mrs. Jacob Nelson is much better and is able to be up and around the house a little each day.

P. L. Anderson, O. C. Jonnson, Andrew Bjerk and T. E. Ellestad went to Thief River Falls Friday night to hear Bowen & Johnson speak.

Mrs. Riesberg, Mrs. Edna Hagland and children returned home Sunday night from a short visit with relatives at Thief River Falls and Radium.

Mrs. Barthlemow left yesterday for a visit with a daughter at Kenmare, N. D., after a short visit here with her brothers, George and and Herb Walker.

T. E. Ellestead and family spent Sunday at the Gubrud home in the city of Argyle, and attended the baptismal service of the six weeks old Gubrud baby.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L Carlson and children and his sister. Miss Amy Carlson, Misses Gunhild, Olava, Elevina and Myrtle Sollom, Bertil and Elmer Sollom autoed to the Red Lakes Sunday for a short outing.

Mr. and Mrs. Docken and children took Mrs. T. O. Docken and children back to Mekinock, N. D. Saturday and left Ardian there to help with the threshing. Mrs. Docken and Lorna returned there Tuesday to see how he was getting along.

Sam Mickelson was taken very much worse last week Thursday. His life was dispaired of for a few days, and all the relatives were sent for. Sunday night he was taken to the Thief River Falls hospital and a minor operation was performed the next morning to relieve the pain. The family have been there this week to help the nurses take care of him. At last reports Mr. Mickelson was slighly improved.

Serious Accidents

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren and Mrs. John Hagberg went to Badger Sunday to visit Mr. Hagberg. He was showing them around the elevator building and went up to the top in the cage of a hoisting elevator. Mr. Holmgren went up also and then his wife wanted to try it. When at or near the top the cable in someway became disconnected which let the cage drop with an awful force. Mrs. Holmgren sustained a dislocated kneecap, the bones of one ankle were badly broken, the other ankle was sprained and her back is lame from the fall.

Mrs. Holmgren was taken to the Roseau hospital where she will be obliged to spend several weeks in bed. Her husband and sister, Mrs. Adams, went there Monday night to see her. Mrs. Hagberg who had been their since the accident returned home the next morning with Mr. Holmgren.

Mrs. Adams returned home Wednesday and reported her sister as well as could be expected.

Mrs. Tora Nelson had her hip broken Tuesday afternoon while trying to keep the cattle from breaking thru the fence, when they pushed her over with the above result. Dr. Mellby was called and did all possible to relieve her suffering, but as she is past 70 years of age her case is very serious.

Whatever had happened, Hammond had evidently not been easily captured. His countenance was somewhat battered, and the one captor who wore a collar was bleeding copiously from a cut cheek. The three turned as Gramont's car drove up, and Hammond gave an ejaculation of relief.

"Here he is now—"

Gramont leaped from the car and strode forward.

"What's been going on here?" he demanded, sharply. "Hammond—"

"I found a dead man over in them bushes," shot out Hammond, "and these guys jumped me before I seen 'em. They claim I done it—"

"I Found a Dead Man Over in Them Bushes," Shot Out Hammond.

"A dead man!" repeated Gramont, and looked at the three. "What do you mean?"

"Give him the spiel, Chacherre," growled one of them. Ben Chacherre stepped forward, his bold eyes fastened on those of Gramont with a look of defiance.

"The sheriff was here some time ago, looking for a stolen boat," he said, "and went off toward the Ledanois place. We were following, in order to help him search, when we came upon this man standing in the bushes, over the body of the sheriff. A knife was in his hand, and the sheriff had been stabbed to death. He drew a pistol and shot one of us—"

Gramont was staggered for a moment. "Wait!" he exclaimed. "Hammond, how much of this is true?"

"What I'm tellin' you, cap'n," answered Hammond, doggedly. "I found a man layin' there and was looking at him when these guys jumped me. I shot that fellow in the arm, all right, then they grabbed my gun and got me down. That's all."

Into the mind of Gramont leaped that brief conversation which he had overheard between Ben Chacherre and the sheriff; the strange, unnatural silence which had concluded that broken-off conversation. He stared from Hammond to the others, speechless for the moment, yet with hot words rising impetuously in him.

Now he noticed that Chacherre and his two companions were watching him very intently, and were slightly circling out. He sensed an acquaintance among all these men. He saw that the wounded man had finished his bandaging, and was now holding his unwounded hand in his pocket, bulkily, menacingly.

Danger flashed upon Gramont—flashed upon him vividly and with startling clearness. He realized that anything was possible in this isolated spot—this spot where murder had so lately been consummated! He checked on his very lips what he had been about to blurt forth; at this instant, Hammond voiced the thought in his mind.

"It's a frame-up!" said the chauffeur, angrily.

"That's likely, isn't it?" Chacherre flung the words in a sneer, but with a covert glance at Gramont. "This fellow is your chauffeur, ain't he? Well, we got to take him in to Houma, that's all."

"Where's the sheriff's body?" demanded Gramont, quietly.

"Over there," Chacherre gestured. "We ain't had a chance to bring him back yet—this fellow kept us busy. Maybe you want to frame up an alibi for him?"

Gramont paid no attention to the sneering tone of this last. He regarded Chacherre fixedly, thinking hard, keeping himself well in hand.

"You say the sheriff was here, then went over toward the Ledanois land?" he asked. "Did he go alone, or were you with him?"

"We were fixin' to follow him," asserted Chacherre, confidently. This was all Gramont wanted to know—that the man was lying. "We were trailin' along after him when he stepped into the bushes. This man of yours was standing over him with a knife—"

"I was, too, when they found me—I was cuttin' me a fishpole," said Hammond, sulkily. He was plainly beginning to be impressed and alarmed by the evidence against him. Gramont only nodded.

"No one saw the actual murder, then?"

"No need for it," said Chacherre, brazenly. "When we found him that way! Eh?"

"I suppose not," answered Gramont, his eyes fastened thoughtfully on Hammond. The latter caught the look, let his jaw fall in astonishment, then flushed and compressed his lips—and waited. Gramont glanced at Chacherre, and launched a chance shaft.

"You're Ben Chacherre, aren't you? Do you work for Mr. Fell?"

The chance shot scored. "Yes," said Chacherre, his eyes narrowing.

"What are you doing here, then?"

For an instant Chacherre was off guard. He did not know how much—or little—Gramont knew; but he did know that Gramont was aware who had taken the loot of the Midnight Masquer from the luggage compartment of the car. This knowledge, very naturally, threw him back on the defense of which he was most sure.

"I came on an errand for my master," he said, and with those words gave the game into Gramont's hands.

There was a moment of silence. Gramont stood apparently in musing thought, conscious that every eye was fastened upon him, and that one false move would now spell disaster. He gave no sign of the tremendous shock that Chacherre's words had just given him; when he spoke, it was quietly and coolly:

"Then your master is evidently associated with Memphis Izzy Gumberts, who owns this place here. Is that right?"

Both Hammond and Chacherre's two friends started at this.

"I don't know anything about that," returned Chacherre, with a shrug which did not entirely conceal his uneasiness. "I know that we've got a murderer here, and that we'll have to dispose of him. Do you object?"

"Of course not," said Gramont, calmly. "Step aside and give me a moment in private with Hammond. Then by all means take him in to Houma. I'd suggest that you tie him up, or make use of handcuffs if the sheriff brought any along. Then you'd better take in the body of the sheriff also. Hammond, a word with you!"

This totally unexpected acquiescence on the part of Gramont seemed to stun Chacherre into inaction. He half moved, as though uncertain whether to bar Gramont from the prisoner, then he stepped aside as Gramont advanced. A gesture to his two companions prevented them from interfering.

"Keep 'em covered, though," he said, shifting his own rifle slightly and watching with a scowl of suspicion.

Gramont ignored him and went up to Hammond, with a look of warning.

"You'll have to submit to this, old man," he said, in a tone that the others could not overhear. "Don't dream that I'm deserting you; but I want a good look at this place if all three of them go away. They must not suspect—"

"Cap'n, look out!" broke in Hammond, urgently. "This here is a gang—the whole thing is a frame-up on me!"

"I know it—I was present when the sheriff was murdered; but keep quiet. I'll come to Houma later tonight and see you." He turned away with a shrug, as though Hammond had denied him some favor, and lifted his voice. "Chacherre! How are you to take this man into town? How did you get here? Will you need to use my car?"

"No." The Creole jerked his head toward the barn. "I came in Mr. Fell's car—it's got a sprung axle and is laid up. We'll take him back in another one."

"Very well," Gramont paused and glanced around. "This is a terrible blow, men. I never dreamed that Hammond was a murderer or could be one! You don't know of any motive for the crime?"

They shok their heads, but suspicion was dying from their eyes. Gramont glanced again at his chauffeur.

"I'll not abandon you, Hammond," he said, severely, coldly. "I'll stop in at Houma and see that you have a lawyer. I think, gentlemen, we had better attend to bringing in the body of the sheriff, eh?"

The wounded man dodged into the barn and returned with a strip of rope. Chacherre took this and firmly bound Hammond's arms, then forced him to sit down and bound his ankles.

Allowing Chacherre and his companion to take the lead, Gramont went with them to the place where the murdered officer lay. As he went, the conviction grew more sure within him that, when he lay there by the rivulet, he had actually heard the last words uttered by the sheriff; that Chacherre had committed the murder in that moment—a noiseless, deadly stab! That Hammond could or would have done it he knew was absurd.

They found the murdered man lying among the bushes. He had been stabbed under the fifth rib—the knife had gone direct to the heart. Chacherre announced that he had Hammond's knife as evidence and Gramont merely nodded his head.

Lifting the body between them, they bore it back to the barn.

"Now," said Gramont, quickly, "I'm off for Houma—if I don't miss my road! You men will be right along?"

"In a jiffy," said Chacherre promptly.

Gramont climbed into his car and drove away. He had no fear of anything happening to Hammond; the evidence against the latter was damning, and with three men to swear him into a hangman's noose, they would bring him to jail safe enough.

"A clever devil, that Chacherre!" he thought, grimly. "We're up against a gang, beyond any doubt. Now, if they don't suspect me—"

He turned in at the Ledanois gate, knowing himself to be beyond sight or hearing of the Gumberts place. He drove the car away from the house, and into the thick of the densest bush-growth that he could find, where it was well concealed from sight. Then, on foot, he made his way along the bank of the bayou until he had come to the rivulet where oil showed.

Here he paused, concealing himself and gaining a place where he could get a view of the Gumberts land. He saw Chacherre and Hammond there beside the body of the sheriff; the other two men were swinging open the barn door. They disappeared inside, and a moment later Gramont heard the whirr of an engine starting. A car backed into the yard and halted.

The three men lifted the body of the sheriff into the tonneau. Chacherre took the wheel, Hammond being bundled in beside him. The other two men climbed in beside the body, rifles in hand. Chacherre started the car toward the road.

"All fine!" thought Gramont with a thrill of exultation. "They've cleared out and left the place to me—and I want a look at that place."

Suddenly, as he stood there, he remembered the slight "plump" that he had heard during that interminable silence which had followed the conversation between the sheriff and Ben Chacherre. It was a sound as though something had fallen near him in the soggy ground.

The remembrance startled him strangely. He visualized an excited murderer standing beside his victim, knife in hand; he visualized the abhorrence which must have seized the man for a moment—the abhorrence which must have caused him to do something in that moment which in a cooler time he would not have done.

Gramont turned toward the little marshy spot where he had lain listening. He bent down, searching the wet ground, heedless that the water soaked into his boots. And, after a minute, a low exclamation of satisfaction broke from him as he found what he sought.

Extend to Include Human Nature.

A gentleman who, we imagine, bears a mental resemblance to our colleague the Nomad, left the crowded city the other day for a tramp over the hills. On his return he remarked to a friend who asked him what kind of a time he'd had, that he was glad to get back to the haunts of men. "The day was perfect," he went on to explain, "but I had a raging toothache, and the truth is I never swear in the presence of nature." Such respect for our dear other mother is commendable and we earnestly advise our golfers to adopt the same rule.—Boston Transcript.

The 118th psalm, which contains 176 verses, is the longest chapter in the Old Testament; the shortest is the 117th psalm, which comprises only two verses.

In the New Testament the longest books are Matthew and Acts, each of which contains 28 chapters, although Luke contains more verses and words. Third John, which contains one chapter, 14 verses and 296 words, is the shortest.

SET THE STANDARD TOO LOW

National Motion Picture Director Gives His Opinion as to Mistakes Made by Producers.

Will Hays, the new motion-picture director, said the other day in New York:

"Too many motion-picture people think that everything really good is highbrow. Their standard is too low. They are like the chorus girl.

"A chorus girl married a rich man after a stormy courtship of about a week, and the Sunday morning following the wedding, when she came downstairs to breakfast, she found her young husband engrossed in the two or three hundred enormous pages of the city's yellowest newspaper.

YOUNG GIRLS NEED CARE

Mothers, watch your Daughters' Health

Health Is Happiness

From the time a girl reaches the age of twelve until womanhood is established, she needs all the care a thoughtful mother can give.

The condition that the girl is then passing through is so critical, and may have such far-reaching effects upon her future happiness and health, that it is almost criminal for a mother or guardian to withhold counsel or advice.

Many a woman has suffered years of prolonged pain and misery through having been the victim of thoughtlessness or ignorance on the part of those who should have guided her through the dangers and difficulties that beset this period.

Mothers should teach their girls what danger comes from standing around with cold or wet feet, from lifting heavy articles, and from overworking. Do not let them over-study. If they complain of headache, pains in the back and lower limbs, they need a mother's thoughtful care and sympathy.

A Household Word in Mother's House writes Mrs. Lynd, about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"My mother gave me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound when I was 14 years old for troubles girls often have and for loss of weight. Then after I married I took the Vegetable Compound before each child was born and always when I felt the least run down. Both my sister and sister-in-law take it and have only the highest praise for it. It has been a household word in my mother's house for years." — Mrs. KATHERYN LYND, 2431 Gladys Ave., Chicago, Ill.

A Little Book Helped Her to Decide

Milwaukee, Wis. — "My daughter took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as she was so weak and did not feel like going to school. She was like that for a whole year before taking your Vegetable Compound. I found a little book of yours in our mail-box and decided to give her your medicine. She is now strong and well and attends school every day. We recommend your Vegetable Compound to all mothers with weak daughters. You may use this letter as a testimonial." — Mrs. E. KLUCZNY, 917 20th Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.

"I was always feeling tired and sleepy, was losing in weight and would faint at times. I had other troubles too, that made me feel badly. I read your little books and heard friends talk about the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done them, so I have taken it too. The results are most satisfactory, for I have gained in weight and my bad symptoms are gone. I recommend your Vegetable Compound to all my friends and you may make whatever use you like of this letter." — GLORIA RAMIREZ, 1116 9th Ave., Tampa, Florida.

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

GAMES NOW PLAYED BY RADIO

Checkers Only One of the Many Amusements That Lend Themselves to the Wireless.

"Playing games by radio is the newest sport," writes William Telher in the July St. Nicholas. "The boys in and around New York city who have small radio-telegraph sets, are having a great deal of fun nowadays in carrying on contests and tournaments through the air. Folks who are listening in hear conversations like this:

"It's your move, John. I just jumped from twenty to twenty-seven.'

"If we did hear a conversation like this, we should at once know that a game of checkers was being played. Checkers is only one of the many games that lends itself to radio. Playing radio checkers is just as easy and almost as fast as playing the game in the ordinary manner. In fact, it is more exciting than the usual game, because we are always playing an invisible opponent."

Too Obedient.

The devout mother and her five year-old daughter were seated in church. When the service began the mother said in an undertone: "Sit on the edge of the pew, dear, and bow your head."

The child obeyed and the mother turned her entire attention to the service. The whole congregation was respectfully quiet.

Burglar Theory Falls Down.

After the federal records in the post office at Vicksburg had been locked up for five days in a safe with a balky combination lock, an expert was called from Grand Rapids to open the safe. Evidently, then, our belief that burglars open all combination safes at least once in three days was without foundation.—Detroit News.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Willmar—Willmar is to install a new street lighting system this fall. The contract for the work has been awarded to the Power Equipment company, Minneapolis.

Austin—The Rose Creek consolidated school will be the first of the rural schools of Mower county to employ motor buses to haul pupils to and from school. Three buses will be used.

Northrop—Northrop's new $12,000 creamery, the most modern in Martin county, has opened. The creamery is owned by farmers.

St. James—Anton Torkelson of this place was elected president of the Watonwan-Brown county branch of the University Farm Alumni association at a meeting attended by 250 University farm graduates and students at Fort Hill.

Montevideo—The fuel situation in Montevideo is very serious. Dealers have practically no stock on hand and few individuals have their winter supply in the bins. The local board of education has made no arrangements for its winter supply of coal.

Two Harbors—The Two Harbors Rod and Gun club is planning to hold a marksmanship tournament here.

Moorhead—Fred R. Prusha, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, will be physical instructor at the Moorhead state teachers college for the coming season, succeeding Wallace Russness, resigned.

Willmar—The Salvation Army is laying the foundation for a new hall at Willmar. The building will be a two story brick structure and will cost approximately $14,000.

Minneapolis — Two men were seriously injured when a Chicago, Great Western engine, upon which they were working at the company's roundhouse on Boom Island, ran wild and crashed through the brick wall of the building.

Crookston—Richard L. Spiering, manager of the Crookston Gas company has been named receiver of the company by the United States district court.

St. Paul—Effective Oct. 15, Chinese ring neck pheasants will be protected by a proclamation issued by Governor J. A. O. Preus. It will be unlawful to capture, kill or have in possession any considerable number of the species.

Albert Lea—For the first time in Freeborn county, tickets good for one free admission at the county fair will be distributed at the schools in the city of Albert Lea and at the rural schools of the county.

Minneapolis—Axel B. Dahl, city attorney of Nashwauk, Minn., is named in disbarment proceedings referred by the state Supreme court to the board of law examiners for preliminary investigation and report, Verne Pidgeon, secretary of the board, announced.

Fertile—Nels Clementsen, aged 65, a farmer living a few miles west of here, was seriously injured when backing a tractor to a threshing separator. Four ribs were broken and he was internally injured.

Duluth—Most of the 400,000 tons of coal scheduled to arrive in Duluth and Superior this week will go to these two ports, it was announced. This movement from the Lake Erie ports is the first since the strike.

Red Wing—At a meeting of the Goodhue Dairymens association, it was decided to raise the price of milk and cream to local consumers. Milk that has been 10 cents a quart hereafter will cost 11 cents.

Slayton—Fire destroyed the $3,000 barn, 30 tons of clover hay, a hog-house, granary with 1,500 bushels of oats and three stacks of straw on the farm of C. M. E. Johnson, northwest of here.

St. Paul—A statewide campaign to interest potato growers in grading the 1922 crop will be launched at the Minnesota State Fair, Sept. 2 to 9, by the state department of agriculture, the state agricultural college, and the potato growers' association.

Big Falls—Eleven rifles and seven pistols greeted federal dry agents when they visited the home of Allen N. Curtis, near Big Falls, Minn., last night, according to reports received at headquarters.

Minneapolis—Joseph E. Link, known as the "Enoch Arden of Minneapolis," is entitled to a pension from the Volunteer Firemen's association, City Attorney Neil M. Cronin has ruled.

St. Paul—Coolidge day, in honor of Vice-President Calvin Coolidge, will be observed at the state fair Wednesday, Sept. 8, when the vice-president will attend and deliver an address.

Wessington Springs, S. D.—More than an hour's rain fell here, the first in six weeks. The moisture was needed for potatoes, corn and pastures. The rain was accompanied by some hail which caused little damage.

Fort Ridgely—Twenty defenders of Fort Ridgely, who fought the Sioux Indians 60 years ago, met members of that tribe and their chief, Moses Columbus, here at the celebration commemorating the raising of the siege in 1862.

Hibbing—What is believed to be the first albino porcupine ever seen has been presented to the "zoo" in Bennett park. Thomas Simpson caught the animal while on a prospecting trip. The "porky" is a pure albino, its hair, quills and skin being milky white the pupils of the eyes bright red and iris pink.

48 MEN ENTOMBED IN BURNING MINE

Employes Ordered To Break Bulkhead Between Kennedy And Argonaut Mines.

RESCUE SEEMS FUTILE

Air Supply Is Restored to 2,800-Foot Level and Is Being Extended to the 4,500- and 4,800-Foot Level to the Men.

Jackson, Cal.—Mine rescue crews worked without avail in the Argonaut gold mine in which 48 men were entombed by a fire. The men were thought to be between the 4,500 and 4,800 foot levels while the main body of the men was more than 1,000 feet above them.

Employes of the mine were sent into the Kennedy mine which connects with the Argonaut mine through a tunnel, but which is closed by a concrete bulkhead, with instructions to break down the bulkhead and enter the Argonaut.

Air Supply Assured.

It had been reported that the Kennedy tunnel had collapsed but the report was not verified. V. S. Garbarini of the Argonaut succeeded in restoring the cut off air supply to the 2,800-foot level and efforts were continued to extend the air supply.

The Argonaut recently was drained of flood waters that were poured in the mine when it was set on fire, and the state industrial accident commission announced that the soft dirt in the mine was nearly as great a menace to the firefighters and rescuers as the fire itself, if the fire burns the timbers down.

The Argonaut mine, one of the famous gold producing mines in California, was opened 25 years ago. The mine is controlled by New York men and is a short distance from Martell, in Amador county. The Kennedy mine adjoining was opened in the '60's and always has been productive.

CAR SHORTAGE HITS FARMER

Huron, S. D.—The railroad shopmen's strike is beginning to affect the farmers throughtout this state keenly. Numerous elevators in various sections are refusing to accept grain except for storage, very little buying going on for the reason that lack of transportation facilities prevents the elevators from shipping.

Farmers who have the finances to back them are building granaries on their own farms, while others are stacking their grain for future threshing when the strike is settled. Other farmers are finding it impossible to pay their threshing bills, with the result that the threshers are finding themselves in hard straits. Several threshers have adopted the policy of giving a 10 per cent discount for cash at the completion of threshing, and this plan is enabling the farmers to borrow money from the banks to meet their threshing bills.

HARDING OPPOSES GOVERNMENT CONTROLS

President Returns From Mayflower Conference, Reveals Intentions.

Washington—Not only will President Harding refuse to take any steps toward government operation of the railroads and coal mines during the present administration, but an influential group of leaders in the senate and house are erecting obstacles to the passage of legislation authorizing such action, became apparent with the return of the president from a conference with several of his principal advisers, held aboard the presidential yacht Mayflower.

Administration leaders have laid aside proposals for government operation and are centering their efforts on less drastic measures to meet the present emergency. Leaders aboard the Mayflower are inclined to believe that the coal strike problem is solving itself and turned their attention to plans for moving products of the mines.

Committees Report.

Meantime committees in both branches of congress reported out for passage later in the week, bills recommended by the administration to strengthen its agency and by giving to the Interstate Commerce commission broader power over priority shipments. In the house the bill will be taken up under a rule providing for six hours of debate.

Amundsen Boat Icebound.

Nome, Alaska—Captain Roald Amundsen, who last month transferred to the schooner Holmes from the Maud on his Arctic expedition, is now at Wainwright, 100 miles southwest of Point Barrow, according to a message from Captain S. C. Cochran of the coastguard cutter Bear. It is thought here that Captain Amundsen and his party have transferred to the Bear from the Holmes, due to heavy ice and that they may be planning to start at Wainwright the airplane flight.

Shame on Them.

PERHAPS there are a few mothers who do not know the virtues of Fletcher's Castoria. Perhaps there are a few who know that there are imitations on the market, and knowing this demand Fletcher's. It is to ALL motherhood, then, that we call attention to the numerous imitations and counterfeits that may be set before them.

It is to all motherhood everywhere that we ring out the warning to beware of the "Just-as-good". For over thirty years Fletcher's Castoria has been an aid in the upbuilding of our population; an aid in the saving of babies.

And yet there are those who would ask you to try something new. Try this. Try that. Even try the same remedy for the tiny, scarcely breathing, babe that you in all your robust womanhood would use for yourself. Shame on them.

CASTORIA

Your Friend, the Physician.

The history of all medicines carries with it the story of battles against popular beliefs: fights against prejudice: even differences of opinion among scientists and men devoting their lives to research work; laboring always for the betterment of mankind. This information is at the hand of all physicians. He is with you at a moment's call be the trouble trifling or great. He is your friend, your household counselor. He is the one to whom you can always look for advice even though it might not be a case of sickness. He is not just a doctor. He is a student to his last and final call. His patients are his family and to lose one is little less than losing one of his own flesh and blood.

Believe him when he tells you—as he will—that Fletcher's Castoria has never harmed the littlest babe, and that it is a good thing to keep in the house. He knows.

CHAPTER XI

Gramont left the covert and walked forward.

He was thinking about that odd mention of Jachin Fell—had Chacherre lied in saying he had come here on his master's business? Perhaps. The man had come in Fell's car, and would not hesitate to lie about using the car. For the moment Gramont put away the circumstance, but did not forget it.

He walked openly toward the Gumberts buildings, thinking that he would have time for a good look around the place before dusk fell; he would then get off for Houma and attend to Hammond's defense.

As for the place before him, he was convinced that it was abandoned. Had any one, other than Chacherre and his two friends, been about the buildings, the late excitement would have brought out the fact. No one had appeared and the buildings seemed vacant.

Gramont's intent was simple and straightforward. In case he found, as he expected to find, any evidence of illegal occupation about the place—as the sheriff seemed to have discovered to his cost—he would lay Chacherre and the other two men by the heels that night in Houma. He would then go on to New Orleans and have Gumberts arrested, although he had no expectation that the master crook could be held on the murder-accessory charge. If this place were used for the lotteries, even, he was fairly certain that Memphis Izzy would have his own tracks covered. The men higher up always did.

He walked straight in upon the barn. It loomed before him, closed, lurid in the level rays of the westering sun. The doors in front had been only loosely swung together and Gramont found them unlocked. He stood in the opening, and surprise gripped him. He was held motionless, gazing with astonished wonder at the sight confronting him.

Directly before him was a small roadster, one which he remembered to have seen Jachin Fell using; in this car, doubtless, Ben Chacherre had driven from the city. He recalled the fact later, with poignant regret for a lost opportunity. But, at the present moment, he was lost in amazement at the great number of other cars presenting themselves to his view.

They were lined up as deep as the barn would hold them, crammed into every available foot of space; well over a dozen cars, he reckoned swiftly. What was more, all were cars of the highest class, with the exception of Fell's roadster. Directly before him were two which he was well aware must have cost close upon ten thousand each. What did this mean? Certainly no one man or one group of men, in this back-country spot, could expect to use such an accumulation of expensive cars!

Gramont glanced around, but found no trace of machinery in the barn. Remembering the motor that he had heard, he turned from the doorway in frowning perplexity. He strode on toward the long shed which stood closer to the house. At the end of this shed was a door, and when he tried it, Gramont found it unlocked. It swung open to his hand, and he stepped inside.

At first he paused, confused by the vague objects around, for it was quite dark in here. A moment, and his eyes grew accustomed to the gloomier lighting. Details came to him: all around were cars and fragments of cars, chassis and bodies in all stages of dismemberment. Still more cars!

He slowly advanced to a long bench that ran the length of the shop beneath the windows. A shop, indeed—a shop, he quickly perceived, fitted with every tool and machine necessary to the most complete automobile repair establishment! Even an air-brush outfit, at one end, together with a drying compartment, spoke of repaint jobs.

Comprehension was slowly dawning upon the mind of Gramont; a moment later it became certainty, when he came to a stop before an automobile engine lying on the bench. He found it to be the engine from a Stutz—the latest multi-valve type adopted by that make of car, and this particular bit of machinery looked like new.

Gramont inspected it, and he saw that the men had done their work well. The original engine number had been carefully dug out, and the place as carefully filled and leveled with metal. Beside it a new number had been stamped. A glance at the electrical equipment around showed that these workers had every appliance with which to turn out the most finished jobs.

As he straightened up from the engine Gramont's eyes fell upon a typed sheet of paper affixed to the wall above the bench. His gaze widened as he inspected it by the failing light. Upon that paper was a list of cars. After each car was a series of numbers plainly comprising the original numbers of the engine, body, radiator and other component parts, followed by another series of new numbers to be inserted. That sheet of paper showed brains, organizing ability, care and attention to the last detail!

Here was the most carefully planned and thorough system of automobile thievery that Gramont had ever heard of. He stood motionless, knowing that this typed sheet of paper in itself was damning evidence against the whole gang of workers. What was more to the point, that paper could be traced; the typewriting could be traced to the man higher up—doubtless Memphis Izzy himself! These men ran in cars by the wholesale, probably from states adjacent to Louisiana. Here, at this secluded point on the bayou, they changed the cars completely about, in number, paint, style of body, and then probably got rid of the new product in New Orleans.

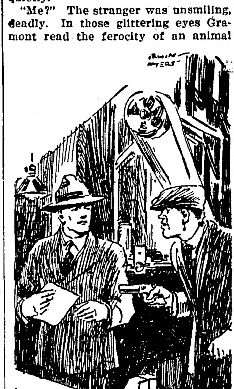
Gramont stood motionless. Surprise had taken hold of him, and even a feeling of slight dismay. This was not at all what he had hoped to find there. He had thought to come upon some traces of the lottery game—

"Seen all you want, bo?" said a voice behind him.

Gramont turned. He found himself gazing directly into an automatic pistol over which glittered a pair of blazing eyes. The man was a stranger to him. The place had not been deserted, after all. He was caught.

"Who are you?" demanded Gramont, quietly.

"Me?" The stranger was unsmiling, deadly. In those glittering eyes Gramont read the ferocity of an animal at bay. "I s'pose you would like to know that, huh? I guess you know enough right now to get all that's comin' to you, bo! Got any particular business here? Speak up quick!"



"Hurry Up! Turn Over the Name and Address."

Gramont was silent. The other sneered at him, viciously.

"Hurry up! Turn over the name and address, and I'll notify the survivin' relatives. Name, please?"

"Henry Gramont," was the calm response. "Don't get hasty, my friend. Didn't you see me here a little while ago with Chacherre and the other boys?"

"What's that?" The glittering eyes flamed up with suspicion and distrust. "Here—with them? No, I didn't. I been away fishing all afternoon. What the h—l you doing around this joint?"

"Your best scheme," said Gramont, coldly, "is to change your style of tone, and to do it in a hurry! If you don't know what's happened here this afternoon, don't ask me; you'll find out soon enough when the other boys get back. You'd better tell them I'm going to get in touch with Memphis Izzy the minute I get back to the city, and that the less talking they do—"

"What the h—l's all this?" demanded the other again, but with a softening of accent. The moniker of Gumberts had its effect, and seemed to shake the man instantly. Gramont smiled as he perceived that the game was won.

"I never heard of no Gramont," went on the other, quickly. "What you doin' here?"

"You're due to learn a good many things, I imagine," said Gramont, carelessly. "As for me, I happened on the place largely by accident. I happen to be in partnership with a man named Jachin Fell, and I came out here on business—"

To Gramont's astonishment the pistol was lowered instantly. It was well that he ceased speaking, for what he had just said proved to be open to misconstruction, and if he had said any more he would have spoiled it. For the man facing him was staring at him in mingled disgust and surprise.

"You're in partnership with the boss!" came the astounding words. "Well, why in h—l didn't you say all that in the first place, instead o' beefin' around? That's no way to butt in, and me thinking you was some dick on the job! Got anything to prove that you ain't pullin' something cute on me?"

"Do you know Fell's writing?" asked Gramont, with difficulty forcing himself to meet the situation coherently. Jachin Fell—the boss!

"I know his mitt, all right."

From his pocket Gramont produced a paper—the memorandum or agreement which he had drawn up with Fell the previous afternoon, relating to the oil company. The other man took it and switched on an electric light bulb overhead. In this glare he was revealed as a ratty little individual with open mouth and teeth hanging out—an adenoidal type, and certainly a criminal type.

It crossed the mind of Gramont that one blow would do the work—but he stood motionless. No sudden game would help him here. The discovery that Fell was "the boss" paralyzed him completely. He had never dreamed of such a contingency. Fell, of all men!

Jachin Fell the "boss" of this establishment! Jachin Fell the man higher up—the brains behind this criminal organization! It was a perfect thunderbolt to Gramont. Now he understood why Chacherre was in the employ of Fell—why no arrest of the man had been possible! Now he perceived that Chacherre must have told the truth about coming here on business for Fell. Reaching farther back, he saw that Fell must have received the loot of the Midnight Masquer, must have turned it over to Lucie Ledanois—

Did she know?

"All right, Mr. Gramont." The ratty little man turned to him with evident change of front. "We ain't takin' no chances here, y'understand. Got quite a shipment of cars comin' in from Texas, and we're tryin' to get some o' these boats cleaned out to make room. Bring out any orders?"

Gramont's brain worked fast.

By overcoming this guttersnipe he might have the whole place at his mercy—but that was not what he wanted. He suddenly realized that he had other and more important fish to fry in New Orleans. Gumberts was there. Fell was there. What he must do demanded time, and his best play was to gain all the time possible, and to prevent this gang from suspecting him in any way.

"Did you see Ben Chacherre?" he countered.

"Uh-huh—seen him just after he come. Gumberts will be out day after tomorrow, he said. The boss is framin' some sort of deal on a guy that he wants laid away—some guy name o' Hammond. Chacherre is running it. He figgers on gettin' Hammond on account of some car that's bein' hunted up—"

Gramont laughed suddenly, for there was a grim humor about the thing. So Jachin Fell wanted to "get something" on poor Hammond! And Chacherre had seized the golden opportunity that presented itself this afternoon—instead of "getting" Hammond for the theft of a car, Chacherre had coolly fastened murder upon him!

"Ben is one smart man; I expect he thinks the gods are working for him," said Gramont, thinly. "So you don't know what happened today, eh? Well, it's great news, but I've got no time to talk about it. They'll tell you when they get back—"

"Where'd they go?" demanded the other.

"Houma. Now listen close! Chacherre did not know that I was in partnership with the boss, get me? I didn't want to tell all the crowd in front of him. Between you and me, the boss isn't any too sure about Ben—"

"Say, I get you there!" broke in the other, sagely. "I tells him six months ago to watch out for that Creole guy!"

"Exactly. You can tell the boys about me when they come back—I don't suppose Ben will be with them. Now, I've been looking over that place next door—"

"Oh!" exclaimed the other, suddenly. "Sure! The boss said that one of his friends would be down to—"

"I'm the one—or one of them," and Gramont chuckled as he reflected on the ludicrous aspects of the whole affair. "I'm going to Houma now, and then back to the city. My car's over next door. Mr. Fell wanted me to warn you to lay low on the lottery business. He's got a notion that some one's been talking."

"You go tell the boss," retorted the other in an aggrieved tone, "to keep his eye on the guys that can talk. Who'd we talk to here? Besides, we're workin' our heads off on these here boats. Memphis Izzy is attending to the lottery—he's got the whole layout up to the house, and we ain't touching it, see? Tell the boss all that."

STRIKER IS SHOT BY RAIL GUARD

Shot Striker in Self Defence --Says That He Was Insulted.

HELD WITHOUT BAIL

Guard Is Moved From County Jail to Avoid Any Possible Violence —Victim Is Wounded Seriously.

Grand Forks, N. D.—Tom Mrachek, 117 Euclid avenue, Grand Forks, is being held without bail in the Grand Forks county jail, charged with the shooting of Adolph Purpur, 130 Budge avenue, rail striker, near the Great Northern roundhouse. Mrachek claims he shot in self defense.

Forks Thoroughly Aroused.

According to J. E. O'Brien, division superintendent, Purpur appeared on the edge of the Great Northern right-of-way north of the roundhouse and molested Mrachek, non-union man, who was on guard duty. Mrachek said Purpur insulted him when ordered from the place.

Mrachek then gave chase and was suddenly affronted, he said, by two other picketers, who suddenly appeared from a nearby cornfield.

Was Assistant Foreman.

Purpur is 34 years old. Mrachek has a wife and five children and was assistant foreman in the roundhouse before the strike.

Attending physicians reported Purpur's condition satisfactory, although it will be seevral days before he is out of danger.

Sheriff C. C. Stewart of Grand Forks county announced that to avoid any possible violence, Thomas M. Mrachek, Great Northern railway guard, who shot and severely wounded Adolph Purpur, a striking shopman, had been removed from the county jail to another place of imprisonment where he is held without bail pending the outcome of Purpur's injuries.

RESCUERS STILL AT WORK

Answering Signals Believed to Have Been Heard From Entombed Men.

Jackson, Cal.—Jackson was still thrilled with the report that the explosions had been heard which apparently were answering signals from the 46 miners who have been entombed in the Argonaut mine for a week, although officials in charge of the work declined to discuss the matter and insisted Thursday was the earliest date on which the men could be reached.

The list of missing men was reduced to 46 by the discovery that one of the men supposedly underground in the Argonaut mine had quit shortly before the explosion and gone to work at the Kennedy mine.

Jim Davis, one of the night crew of rescuers working in the adjoining Kennedy mine, was the man who said he heard five explosions coming from the Argonaut when two signal blasts were fired on the 3,700-foot level. The miners say the sounds could not have been caused by falling rock.

By forethought at the time they were entombed, the 46 miners might have been able to save their candles and giant powder for use in helping work their way out of their rocky underground prison, experienced miners believe.

After completing the detour, they will have 353 feet of the tunnel to clear out and a 75-foot cut to make to the 4,200-foot level of the Argonaut, where the entombed men can be reached.

ARMY AVIATOR OFF ON CROSS NATION FLIGHT

One Stop Planned by Aviator Between Jacksonville and San Diego.

Jacksonville, Fla.—Lieutenant James H. Doolittle, army aviator, hopped off from the beach at Neptune at 10:03 p. m. for a flight by airplane to San Diego. He planned only one stop at Kelley Field, San Antonio, Texas, for fuel.

Live Oak, Fla.—Lieutenant Doolittle passed over here on his transcontinental airplane flight. Previously he had been reported over Lake City, 80 miles from the starting point, and with a brisk southeast wind quartering on his trail. He covered the 23 miles from Lake City to Live Oak in 12 minutes, or at a speed of nearly two miles a minute.

Turns Down $1,000,000 Job.

Chicago—Nawanna Micor, who in everyday life is Miss Muriel McCormick, has refused a $1,000,000 contract to appear in a motion picture, according to close friends. Miss McCormick refused to make any comment on her plans, being busy moving from the home of her father, Harold F. McCormick, who recently married Ganna Walska, the Polish opera star, to an attic studio, three flights up, where she will pursue her operatic studies.

U. S. GOV'T TAKES A HAND

Reasons For Such Action Is Survival And Supremacy Of Government.

23 TRAINS TAKEN OFF

Chicago—Taking one of the most drastic steps ever attempted in a strike situation, the United States government obtained a temporary federal order restraining striking railroad shopmen, their officers and affiliated bodies throughout the country from interfering in any way whatever with the operation of the nation's railroads.

The restraining order, hearing on which was set for September 11, was issued by Federal Judge James H. Wilkerson, upon the petition of United States Attorney General Harry M. Daugherty, who came here from Washington to argue for the action.

The order enjoins until the hearing all railway employes, attorneys, servants, agents, associates and all persons acting in conjunction with them from in any manner interfering with, hindering or obstructing railway companies, their agents, servants or employes in the operation of their respective railroads and systems of transportation or the performance of their public duties and obligations in the transportation of passengers and property in interstate commerce and the carriage of the mails, and from in any manner interfering with employes engaged in inspection, repair, operation and use of trains, locomotives, cars, and other equipments, and from attempting to prevent any persons from freely entering into or continuing in the employ of the companies for the purpose of inspection, and repairing of locomotives and cars, or otherwise.

BANDIT PAYS DEATH PENALTY

Most Dramatic Execution Ever Witnessed, Says Jail Officials.

Atlanta, Ga.—Maintaining his stoicism to the last and with a smile on his lips as the black cap was being adjusted preparatory to spring the trap under him, Frank B. Dupre, 19-year-old "peach tree bandit," paid the death penalty at the Fulton county jail for the murder, December 15 last, of Irby C. Walker, private detective. The trap was sprung at 2:04 p. m. and 16 minutes later the youth was pronounced dead.

Last Scenes Dramatic.

The scenes attending the execution of Dupre were described by old jail officials as the most dramatic ever witnessed by them.

Outside the jail, the streets on three sides were blocked with persons eager to get a glimpse of the proceedings, even the tops of buildings nearby being occupied by men, women and children.

Police reserves were called to keep order. Inside the prison walls, Dupre probably was more composed than any of the officials, witnesses or fellow prisoners.

Fall of Death Trap Heard.

The youthful bandit was engaged in religious services when the fall of the death trap for Luke McDonald, negro, convicted for the murder of a negro woman, could be heard throughout the jail. He paid no attention to the sound which within the hour was to mean his own end. He continued in prayer until 15 minutes of the hour set for his execution, when, unfalteringly, he started for the gallows, five stories above.

GIRL THOUGHT TO BE HELD BY SLAVERS

Ocean City, N. J.—Kidnapped by white slavers, a young girl, calling herself Mable Gilmore, may be held prisoner aboard an ocean-going tug lying off the New Jersey coast.

First word of the girl's supposed plight came in a note found in a bottle washed up on the beach. This note, scribbled in pencil on brown paper, said:

"August 25, 1922. Help! If anyone should find my plea, for God's sake come to my rescue. Five men on a tug drugged and dragged me here three days ago. They would kill me if they caught me writing, but they are all drunk and singing songs.

"I know I am somewhere along the Atlantic coast. Come, for God's sake, come. Help.—Mable Gilmore."

Man Killed By Own Car.

Bathgate, N. D.—The body of H. L. Holmes, 60, former state auditor and president of the First National bank of Bathgate, was found in his private garage, death having resulted from strangulation, when the rear of his auto, with wheels removed while being repaired, slipped off a jack and fell upon him, the axle pinning him to the floor by the neck. He was found by his wife and daughter, who were alarmed at his long absence at the garage.

MRS. LULA VANN FULTON, ARK.

Fulton, Arkansas.—"I used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a soreness in my side. I would suffer so badly every month from my waist down that I could not be on my feet half the time. I was not able to do my work without help. I saw your Vegetable Compound advertised in a newspaper and gave it a fair trial. Now I am able to do my work and don't even have a backache every month. I cannot praise your Vegetable Compound enough and highly recommend it to those who have troubles like mine. I am willing for these facts to be used as a testimonial to lead all who suffer with female troubles, as I did, to the right road to health."—Mrs. LULA VANN, Box 43, Fulton, Arkansas.

Its this sort of praise of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, given by word of mouth and by letter, one woman to another, that should cause you to consider taking this well-known medicine, if you are troubled with such symptoms as painful periods, weak, nervous feelings, miserable pains in your back, and cannot work at certain times.

Here is a woman who is so grateful and glad to be relieved from a painful and nerve racking physical condition that she wishes to tell all sick women.

Over the Telephone.

The Woman was calling a rather important business man on a morning when the telephone service seemed to be practically temperamental. She had her number and was waiting to be connected with the business man when a masculine voice cheerily called out, "Hello." "Is Mr. James in?" asked the Woman. "When did he come in?" replied the masculine voice. At that, the Woman sensed something wrong and inquired, "What number is this?" "This is the morgue," replied the voice. The Woman gave up and decided to write a letter instead.—Chicago Journal.

This Often Happens.

"How did Blithers get a job with the government?"

Backache Is a Warning!

Those agonizing twinges across the small of the back, that dull, throbbing backache may mean serious kidney weakness—serious, if neglected, for it may lead to gravel, stone in the kidneys, bladder inflammation, dropsy or fatal Bright's disease. If you are suffering with a bad back, have dizzy spells, headaches, nervous, despondent attacks or disordered kidney action, heed Nature's warning. Get after the cause. Doan's Kidney Pills have helped thousands. They should help you. Ask your neighbor!

A North Dakota Case

J. M. Russell, Cando, N. D., says: "I had trouble with my kidneys. My back ached and pained something fierce. When I stooped I could hardly straighten, my back was so lame. The kidney secretions passed too freely and were highly colored. Doan's Kidney Pills have practically cured me and I have had little trouble since."

She Changed Her Mind.

A gentle-minded Cleveland woman, arriving in New York one day, gave the porter at the station a dime. The porter in a fury threw it on the ground. The Cleveland woman picked it up. At the same time she explained gently that this was the only coin she happened to have in her purse, and in parting with it for a tip she had condemned herself to walk two miles to her hotel instead of taking the bus.

This explanation mollified the porter. "In that case, lady," he said, "I'll take the tip."

"No, never mind," sad the Cleveland woman in her gentle way. "I think I'll take the bus."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Make It Dorothy.

A young man informed John L. Duvall, president of the Marion County State bank, recently, that he wished to start a savings account for his little son. Mr. Duvall, seeing the smile on the man's face, guessed that it was a new baby and offered his congratulations, which the patron smilingly acknowledged. The account was opened in the regular way with the father as trustee for Arthur ——. Several days later the young man entered the bank and approached Mr. Duvall.

"Say, Mr. Duvall," he said, "I'd like to change the name on that account I opened for Arthur a couple of weeks ago. Make it Dorothy."—Indianapolis News.

Word of Hope.

A railway lawyer tells of a malingerer who finally got into a real wreck. He was rushed to a hospital in an unconscious condition and was operated on at once. After the operation, still dazed from the anesthetic, he said feebly:

"What is this place?"

"You have," the house surgeon announced, "been badly injured in an accident on a street car, but you will recover."

"Recover!" said the man brazing up. "Recover! How much?"—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Once at Least Golfer Had a Chance to Turn in a Score His Opponent Could Not Beat.

Eugene G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel company, plays a first-class game of golf. Between him and his "big chief," Charles M. Schwab, exists a keen friendly rivalry, the two playing regularly together.

In the steel trade, they tell the story of a match once played between the two. On the first hole, the story goes, Schwab, who was keeping score, asked Grace how many shots he had taken, and was told five. "I took a four," said Schwab. At the next hole, Grace had a four and Schwab claimed a three. As he holed out at the third, Schwab asked: "Gene, how many did you have?"

For Physical Education.

Representatives of twenty-five organizations devoted to athletics, physical education, health and education called upon President Harding recently to ask his support securing universal physical education in the schools of the country. Although no new legislation was urged, the need for strong federal interest was brought out. At present only one-tenth of the school children of the United States are given physical training.

ALWAYS HIS UNLUCKY DAY

Dr. Rathenau, German Statesman, Had Dread of Saturday Which His Tragic Fate Justified.

Two weeks before his murder M. Rathenau was chatting with a few friends after dinner in the living room of his villa at Grunwald. The talk had been about the popular superstition which attaches to Friday, a day of evil repute.

"My unlucky day," M. Rathenau remarked, "has always been Saturday. Twice in my life I have nearly been killed. Once, when a child, I was badly injured in a runaway. This was on a Saturday. Then years later I was almost killed in a fall down a stairway—on a Saturday. It's my bad day."

M. Rathenau was assassinated on Saturday.—Le Petit Parisien, Paris.

Will Clean Historic Edifice.

Westminster abbey, London, is going to have its first bath for many a year.

Prominent experts in old wood carvings of the Gothic and Norman periods, have discovered a preparation which can be run over the wood of the old choir stalls and on the alabaster of tombs, which will take off the dirt, without harming the beautiful work, bringing to light the wonderful color effects of the old paints beneath the dirt layers.

A preparation of lime, which will give the historic abbey the effect of having been whitewashed when first applied, will be painted on the outside stone work of the abbey, to clean the gray stone back to its original colors. At present the outside is, in places, black.

ROOM FOR BUT ONE THOUGHT

Quite Impossible for Glutton's Ideas to Rise Above Consideration of His Stomach.

"Henry Watterson," said a Louisville editor, "was a gourmand—a fin gourmet, as the French put it—but he hated gluttony like sin.

"Gluttons, he claimed, couldn't keep their minds off their stomachs. He said he once visited an English lord, and the smoking room of the castle was crowded with trophies of the lord's skill in the hunting field.

"A fat glutton was among the party. He, with the rest, admired the fine display of antlers—horns of the mountain sheep, the elk, the antelope, the wild goat, moose and so on. Then there were skins—bear skins, bison skins, tiger skins. And stuffed birds—pheasants, woodcock, wild turkey, wild duck.

"'My lord,' said the glutton, 'tell me—did you eat all this yourself?'"

Grape-Nuts
A FOOD
Don't try to cook THIS FOOD.

Maybe that hill is not there, after all—

VERY often the hill we seem to be climbing is made out of the common mistakes of diet which starve tissues and nerves and slow down energies.

How smooth and level the path seemed to be when we were younger.

Simple, natural food may level that hill to a smooth path again

Why not try it?

Begin today with a dish of Grape-Nuts with cream or milk—and fresh or preserved fruit added if you like.

Keep on with this crisp, delicious, strengthening food in place of heavy, ill-assorted, starchy breakfasts and lunches—and see if the old-time zest and speed on the old-time level path doesn't come back again.

Our school board made a tax levy of $6000.00 at the regular meeting Saturday night. This is $2400.00 less than the tax levy of last year.

The village council made a tax levy of $1300.00 at their regular meeting Tuesday night. This tax levy is $700.00 less than last year.

Some claim these tax levies are too low and that they will have to be raised next year. All that is probably true, but now that people are feeling the burden of the closing of the bank, is the time to lighten their load and try to give them all possible encouragement.

What the Merchant Marine Bill Means

By MALCOLM STEWART

Chairman, Middle West Merchant Marine Committee

WHAT does the merchant marine legislation pending in Congress mean? How much will it cost? What will be the direct return? The indirect return? How will it safeguard the nation? How will it help our foreign trade? Our domestic business?

President Harding says passage of the bill will put the American flag back on the seas. Chairman Lasker of the Shipping Board says it will do that and provide a market for government owned ships, now unsaleable. Senator Ransdell of Louisiana, president of the National Merchant Marine Association, says the bill will do all the President says it will do, all Chairman Lasker hopes for, and in addition will provide world markets for our excess agricultural products, an outlet for manufactures and help our shippers.

The first thing asked about legislation, shipping or otherwise, is "How much will it cost?"

Shipping Board experts calculate the indirect aids to shipping in the bill will not exceed $6,000,000 and the direct aid $15,000,000, the first year. The maximum will not exceed $30,000,000 in any one year, the experts say. Indirect aids include sale of Shipping Board vessels to American operators on easy terms; that half the incoming immigrants come in American ships; that government officials and goods be carried in American ships. Those indirect aids take nothing from the Treasury.

The indirect aid most interesting to the public permits the shipper to deduct from his income tax five per cent. of the freight on goods shipped in American vessels. This applies to imports and exports, so the benefit would be distributed throughout the nation in lower prices.

The direct aid estimated to cost $15,000,000 the first year, and after five years perhaps $30,000,000, is payments to owners of ships of over 1,500 tons in foreign trade to partly overcome higher operating costs of our ships. Payments are scaled according to speed and based on tonnage and miles, travelled.

The direct return of the legislation would be the retention in this country of hundreds of millions now paid foreign carriers of our goods; the making of a live asset, instead of a dead liability, of the Shipping Board fleet, now unmarketable. The last item is estimated at $150,000,000, not counting $4,000,000 a month it costs to run Shipping Board vessels now.

The indirect return of the shipping bill is beyond calculation. Not even the best informed shipping expert, nor the most enthusiastic advocate of the bill, is able to figure this. Probably the most important indirect return will come in the revival of shipbuilding. For America to have the correctly balanced fleet vital in world trade, hundreds of the finest, fastest ships will have to be built, employing thousands of skilled workers in the many trades incidental to shipbuilding.

The most general indirect return would be expanded foreign commerce. That directly concerns the farmer of the Middle West with surplus crops to sell and the manufacturer with excess production. In 1921, with ships in ample supply, farm and forest exports were worth $2,250,000,000; in 1919, $4,250,000,000. In the five years before the war, when American ships handled less than ten per cent. of our foreign trade, those exports averaged little more than one billion dollars.

The nation's safety is linked directly with the shipping bill. Naval power—that is, fighting ships—has been fixed at the 5-5-3 ratio. But naval power is not sea power. Great Britain's sea power ratio, based on ships suitable for navy auxiliaries, is five to one for the United States. The shipping bill corrects this by fostering the very type of vessel needed to back up our restricted Navy—the ship making 18 knots or better, of which Britain now has 44, and we only seven.

Every American citizen has a direct interest in the bill.

A Fortune For Every Farmer

TECKTONIUS SILO
RACINE, WIS. U.S.A.

WITH the discovery of the wonderful feeding value of the easily grown, yet lowly sunflower with the proper kind of a silo to store and ferment it in, one of the greatest money and labor saving avenues have been opened to the American farmer that has ever been known.
Thousands of farmers are cashing in on this knowledge. They have learned that with this succulent and low cost ensilage when stored in a silo constructed with our quality staves and their saving has been trebled. And not only that, but their profits from milk and butter have been greatly increased.
This combination gives you a silo with the famous TECKTONIUS perfect fitting hinged silo door which always insures air tightness, the wonderful TECKTONIUS Self-adjusting Straight Pull hoop fastener that automatically cares for all contraction and expansion of silo, the incomparable TECKTONIUS anchorage system that insures rigidity at all times and a host of other special features that make the TECKTONIUS stand supreme among silos.
Come in and get our book "Perfect Silage" and let us tell you more about the wonderful possibilities of sunflowers as a profitable feed. You'll readily see why you should start a sunflower crop of your own and erect a TECKTONIUS silo.

Now that the state is improving and maintaining highways which formerly took a big share of road and bridge funds, the counties and townships are left with all local road tax money—about $20,000,000 for each of the last two years—to build up and maintain the local or feeder roads.

The rural credits amendment, to be known as Amendment No. 1, is one of the important issues this fall. It's claimed it will help build up the industry of farming without any expense to the taxpayers. This amendment has the backing of many and undoubtedly will be a good thing for the whole state.

Cows that freshen at this time of the year will give a good flow of milk all winter. Winter is the season when the farmer has time to give the dairy cow the care she needs to give the best results.

The Commercial Club and Merchants Assn. of Thief River Falls will give $100.00 in premiums for the best displays of vegetables and small fruits exhibted at a show to be held in that city in the near future.

Following adoption of the Babcock road plan, county and township taxes for road and bridge purposes last year for the first time in the history of the state were reduced—the cut aggregating about $1,5000,000. Other decreases are predicted from time to time.

There is considerable complaint that potatos are too cheap, which is true, but so is all kinds of grain. Cultivating potatoes beats summer fallowing, and a good clean potato field will make a good place to seed small grain next year,—same with corn too.

The U. S. Government has made an allotment of $400,000 to be devided among several states that cooperate with the Government in protecting forest lands from fire. Minnesota, Maine, New York, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Washington and Oregon, each get $24,000, the highest amount alloted to any state. South Dakota gets $100.

"Tell him yourself," Gramont laughed, good-humoredly. "Gumberts is coming out day after tomorrow, is he? That'll be Friday. Hm! I think that I'd better bring Fell out here the same day, if I can make it. I probably won't see Gumberts until then—I'm not working in with him and he doesn't know me yet—but I'll try and get out here on Friday with Fell. Now, I'll have to beat it in a hurry. Any message to send?"

"Not me," was the answer.

Gramont scarcely knew how he departed, until he found himself scrambling back through the underbrush of the Ledanois place.

He rushed into the house, found the fire had died down beyond all danger, and swiftly removed the few things they had taken from the car. Carrying these, he stumbled back to where he had hidden the automobile. He scarcely dared to think, scarcely dared to congratulate himself on the luck that had befallen him, until he found himself in his own car once more, and with open throttle sweeping out through the twilight toward Paradis and Houma beyond. A whirlwind of mad exultation was seething within him—exultation as sudden and tremendous as the past weeks had been uneventful and dragging.

Gramont, in common with many others, had heard much indefinite rumor of an underground lottery game that was being worked among the negroes of the state and the Chinese villages along the gulf coast. And now he knew definitely.

Lotteries have never died out in Louisiana since the brave old days of the government-ordained gambles, laws and ordinances to the contrary. No laws can make the yellow man and the black man forego the get-rich-quick heritage of their fathers. On the Pacific coast lotteries obtain and will obtain wherever there is a Chinatown. In Louisiana the days of the grand lottery have never been forgotten. The last two years of high wages had made every negro wealthy, comparatively speaking. The lottery mongers would naturally find them a ripe harvest for the picking. And who would gravitate to this harvest field if not the great Gumberts, the uncaught Memphis Izzy, the promoter who had never been "mugged!"

Here, at one stroke, stumbling on the thing by sheer blind accident, Gramont had located the nucleus of the whole business!

Gradually his brain cooled to the realization of what work lay before him. He was through Paradis, almost without seeing the town, and switched on his lights as he took the highway to Houma. Sober reflection seized him. Not only was this crowd of crooks working a lottery, but they were also managing a stupendous thievery of automobiles, in which cars were looted by wholesale! And the man at the head of it all, the man above Memphis Izzy and his crooks, was Jachin Fell of New Orleans.

Did Lucie Ledanois dream such a thing? No. Gramont dismissed the question at once. Fell was not an unusual type of man. There were many Jachin Fells throughout the country, he reflected. Men who applied their brains to crooked work, who kept themselves above any actual share in the work, and who profited hugely by tribute money from every crook in every crime.

To the communities in which they lived such men were patterns of all that wealthy gentlemen should be. Seldom, except perhaps in gossip of the underworld, was their connection with crime ever suspected. And—this thought was sobering to Gramont—never did they come within danger of retribution at the hands of the law. Their ramifications extended too far into politics; and the governors of some Southern states have unlimited powers of pardon.

"This is a big day!" reflected Gramont, dismissing the sinister suggestion of this last thought. "A big day! What it will lead to, I don't know. Not the least of it is the financial end of it—the oil seepage! That little iridescent trickle of oil on the water means that money worries are over, both for me and for Lucie. I'm sorry that I am mixed up with Fell; I've enough money of my own to drill at least one good well, and one is all we'll need to bring in oil on that place. Well, we'll see what turns up! My first job is to make sure Hammond is safe, and to relieve his mind. I'll have to leave him in jail, I suppose—"

Why did Fell want to "get something" on Hammond? To this there was no answer.

He drove to Houma to find the town abuzz with excitement, for the news of the sheriff's murder had stirred the place wildly. Proceeding straight to the courthouse, Gramont encountered Ben Chacherre as he was leaving the car.

"Hello, there!" he exclaimed. "Lost my road. Where's Hammond?"

Chacherre jerked his head toward the courthouse.

"In yonder. Say, are you going back to the city tonight?"

"Yes." Gramont regarded him. "Why?"

"Take me back, will you? I've missed the last up train, and if you're goin' back anyhow I won't have to hire a car. I can drive for you, and we'll make it in a couple of hours, before midnight sure."

"Hop in," said Gramont, nodding toward the car. "I'll be back as soon as I've had a word with Hammond. No danger of his getting lynched, I hope?"

"Not a chance," said the other, conclusively. "Six deputies up there now, and quite a bunch of ex-soldiers comin' to stand guard. You goin' to fight the case?"

"No," said Gramont. "Can't fight a sure thing, can you? I'm sorry for him, though."

Gramont was much relieved to find that there was no danger of lynching, which had been his one fear. It was with much persuasion that he got past the guard and into the courthouse, where he was received by a number of deputies in charge of the situation.

After conferring with them at some length, he was grudgingly taken to the cell occupied by Hammond. The latter received him with a wide grin, and gave no signs of the grueling ordeal through which he had passed.

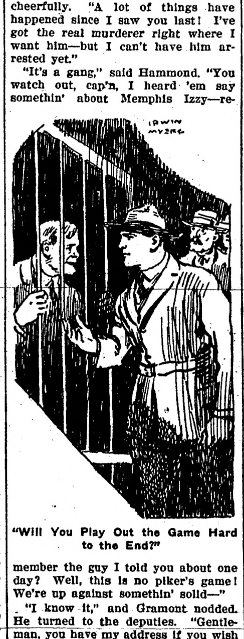
"Listen, old man," said Gramont, earnestly. "Will you play out the game hard to the end? I'll have to leave you here for two days. At the end of that time you'll be free."

The listening deputies sniffed, but Hammond merely grinned again and put a hand through the bars.

"Whatever you say, cap'n," he rejoined. "It sure looks bad—"

"Don't you think it," said Gramont, cheerfully. "A lot of things have happened since I saw you last! I've got the real murderer right where I want him—but I can't have him arrested yet."

"It's a gang," said Hammond. "You watch out, cap'n, I heard 'em say somethin' about Memphis Izzy—remember the guy I told you about one day? Well, this is no piker's game! We're up against somethin' solid—"



"Will You Play Out the Game Hard to the End?"

"I know it," and Gramont nodded. He turned to the deputies. "Gentleman, you have my address if you wish to communicate with me. I shall be back here day after tomorrow—at least, before midnight of that day. I warn you, that if anything happens to this man in the meantime, you shall be held personally responsible. He is innocent."

"Looks like we'd better hold you, too," said one of the men. "You seem to know a lot!"

Gramont looked at him a moment.

"I know enough to tell you where to head in if you try any funny work here," he said, evenly. "Gentlemen, thank you for permitting the interview! I'll see you later."

The coroner's jury had already adjudged Hammond guilty of the murder. Returning to the car, Gramont had Ben Chacherre drive to a restaurant, where they got a bite to eat. Twenty minutes later they were on their way to New Orleans—and Gramont learned for the first time of Joseph Maillard's murder by the Midnight Masquer, and of the arrest of Bob Maillard for the crime.

CHAPTER XII

The Ultimatum.

Upon the following morning Gramont called both Jachin Fell and Lucie Ledanois over the telephone. He acquainted them briefly with the result of his oil investigation, and arranged a meeting for ten o'clock, at Fell's office.

It was slightly before ten when Gramont called with the car for Lucie. Under the spell of her smiling eagerness, the harshness vanished from his face; it returned again a moment later, for he saw that she, too, was changed. There was above them both a cloud. That of Gramont was secret and brooding. As for Lucie, she was in mourning. The murder of Joseph Maillard, the arrest and undoubted guilt of Bob Maillard, dwarfed all else in her mind. Even the news of the oil seepage, and the fact that she was probably now on the road to wealth, appeared to make little impression upon her.

"Thank heaven," she said, earnestly, as they drove toward Canal street, "that so far as you are concerned, Henry, the Midnight Masquer affair was all cleared up before this tragedy took place! It was fearfully imprudent of you—"

"Yes," answered Gramont, soberly, reading her thought. "I can realize my own folly now. If this affair were to be laid at my door, some kind of a case might be made up against me, and it would seem plausible. But, fortunately, I was out of it in time. Were we merely characters in a standardized detective story, I suppose I'd be arrested and deluged with suspense and clues and so forth."

"Your escape was too narrow to joke over, Henry," she reproved him, gravely.

"I'm not joking, my dear Lucie. I learned nothing about the tragedy until late last night. From what I can find in the papers, it seems agreed that Bob was not the real Masquer, but had assumed that guise for a joke. A tragic joke! Since he was undoubtedly drunk at the time, his story can't be relied upon as very convincing. And yet, it's frightfully hard to believe that, even by accident, a son should have shot down his own father—"

"Don't!" Lucie winced a little. "In spite of all the evidence against him, in spite of the way he was found with that aviation uniform, it's still awful to believe. I can't realize that it has actually happened."

"According to the papers, poor Mrs. Maillard has gone to pieces. No wonder."

"Yes. I was there with her all day yesterday, and shall go again today. They say Bob is terribly broken up. He sent for his mother, and she refused to see him. I don't know how it is all going to end! Do you think his story might be true—that somebody else might have acted as the Masquer that night?"

Gramont shook his head.

"It's possible," he said, reluctantly, "yet it hardly seems very probable. And now, Lucie, I'm very sorry indeed to say it—but you must prepare yourself against another shock in the near future."

"What do you mean? About the oil—"

"No. It's too long a story to tell you now; here we are at the Maison Blanche. Just remember my words, please. It's something that I can't go into now."

"Very well, Henry! Do you think that it's possible your chauffeur, Hammond, could have learned about the drinking party, and could have—"

Gramont started. "Hammond? No. I'll answer for him beyond any question, Lucie. By the way, does Fell know anything about Hammond having been the first Masquer?"

"Not from me," said the girl, watching him.

"Very well. Hammond got into a bit of trouble at Houma, and I had to leave him there. It was none of his fault, and he'll get out of it all right. Well, come along up to our oil meeting! Forget your troubles, and don't let my croakings about a new shock cause you any worry just yet."

He was thinking of Jachin Fell, and the girl's closeness to Fell. Had he not known that Fell was responsible for Hammond's being in jail, he might have felt differently. As it was, he was now forewarned and forearmed, although he could not see what animus Fell could possibly have against Hammond.

It was lucky, he reflected grimly, that he had never breathed to a soul except Lucie the fact that Hammond had been the first Masquer! Had Fell known this fact, his desire to lay Hammond by the heels might have been easily fulfilled—and Hammond would probably have found himself charged with Maillard's murder.

They found Jachin Fell dictating to a stenographer. He greeted them warmly, ushering them at once into his private office.

Gramont found it difficult to convince himself that his experiences of the previous afternoon had been real. It was almost impossible to believe that this shy, apologetic little man in gray was in reality the "man higher up!" Yet he knew it to be the case—knew it beyond any escape.

"By the way," and Fell turned to Gramont, "if you'll dictate a brief statement concerning that oil seepage, I'd be obliged! Merely give the facts. I may have need of such a statement from you."

Gramont nodded and joined the stenographer in the outer office, where he dictated a brief statement. It did not occur to him that there might be danger in this; at the moment, he was rather off his guard. He was thinking so much about his future assault on Fell that he quite ignored the possibility of being placed on the defensive.

Within five minutes he had returned to Lucie and Jachin Fell, who were discussing the condition of Mrs. Maillard. Gramont signed the statement and handed it to Fell, who laid it with other papers at his elbow.

"I suppose we may proceed to business?" began Fell. "I have drawn up articles of partnership; we can apply for incorporation later if we so desire. Lucie, both Henry Gramont and I are putting twenty-five thousand dollars into this company, while you are putting in your land, which I am valuing at an equal amount. The stock, therefore, will be divided equally among us. That is understood?"

"Yes. It's very good of you, Uncle Jachin," said the girl, quietly. "I'll leave everything to your judgment."

The little gray man smiled.

"Judgment is a poor horse to ride. Here's everything in black and white. I suggest that you both glance over the articles, sign up, and we will then hold our first meeting."

Gramont and Lucie read over the partnership agreement, and found it perfectly correct.

Norwood—G. F. Dennstedt, 60 years old, a county commissioner of Carver county, has disappeared at the State Fair, the Minneapolis police were told. Relatives fear that he may be ill or the victim of foul play.

Northfield — Although graduation cost Carleton two regular ends, a tackle, a center and a halfback, Coach Claude Hunt believes that prospects for this season's team are as bright as in any recent years.

Fairmont—That feeding steers is a good investment was proved here when A. J. Driscoll, representing a St. Paul company, sold 93 head of steers within a few hours after they had been unloaded.

Mankato—Henry Meins, brought back here from Worthington on charges of stealing automobiles, in making a confession to police, alleged his wife assisted him in stealing one car here and another at New Ulm.

Mankato—The champion bread-making team selected at last year's fair is now demonstrating in Winnipeg before extension workers of Manitoba. The team is from Mankato and is made up of Leona Peterson, Evelyn Cuddy and Myra Jones.

Moorhead—Sophie Carlson, who escaped from the state insane asylum at Fergus Falls several days ago, has been captured.

Eyota—Two little 12-year-old girls, Lillian Katzung of Alden and Marcella Keefe of Eyota, captured the sweepstakes and the reserve sweepstakes prizes with their heifers in the dairy calf exhibits at the State Fair.

Pipestone—John Barton of Sioux Falls carried away two silver loving cups in the tennis tournament held on the local courts. He was one of the winners in the finals of the double play and also won the single match. Carl Stuckeman, also of Sioux Falls, was Barton's mate in the doubles. Players from Dell Rapids, Sioux Falls, Flandreau, Tyler, Lake Benton, Worthington, Windom, Slayton, Hardwick and Pipestone, took part in the contest.

Virginia—Due to cement shortage, city improvements are being held up and unless supplies arrive soon the city warehouse and garage will have to be built next year. Paving will receive first attention.

Fairmont—Between the closing of schools in the afternoon and the opening next morning men with tractors "snaked" off its foundations the school building in Rolling Green township and moved it to a new location. The school house was located 46 years ago and recently a bitter controversy arose, some patrons demanding a new location.

Bagley—The Bagley Independent owned by a large number of farmer stockholders, announces that it will be sold as quickly as possible, and the stockholders to make up for the losses incurred during the past three years.

St. Paul—Marion Lindley, 25 years old, a painter employed by the Great Northern railroad in St. Paul, was crushed to death between two freight cars at the Jackson Street shops.

Northfield—Alumni students and former students of Carleton college now residents of Cannon Falls, Farmington and Northfield united there the 6th in the organization of a Carleton club.

Owatonna—The city council has split the first and second wards into two precincts each in order that votes cast at the November elections can be counted more quickly.

St. Paul—The directors of the Twin City Rapid Transit company authorized the payment of a regular quarterly dividend on preferred stock at a meeting held at the company's offices here. The dividend is $1.75 per share.

Winona—Martin Peterson, 18 years old, of Rochester, is being held at the Winona County jail in connection with the theft of automobile tires from a garage at Minnesota City.

Mankato—When within a block of her own home, returning from a touring trip through Minnesota and northern Wisconsin, Mrs. H. C. Kroon of this city was badly injured in an automobile accident.

Red Wing—The Hamline university piano which was used at Red Wing in 1854 has been placed in front of the speakers' platform in Portrait hall of the Territorial Pioneer's building and was used in programs during fair week.

Duluth—Although failing to deposit a $25,000 check required to insure purchase of the abandoned line of the Duluth & Northern Minnesota railroad Robert Waldron, Minneapolis, declared he had not abandoned plans for the purchase of the road.

Duluth—Legislation authorizing issuance of camping licenses to campers will be advocated at the next state legislature by the State Forestry department as a means of obtaining funds to carry out the forestry program, State Forester W. T. Cox said.

St. James—J. A. McRell, guard for the Omaha railway, was fired on here by unidentified persons who sped away in an automobile. McRell, who was injured, was guarding the home of a railway employe who went out on strike, but who returned to work recently.

Aitkin—Will B. Gwathmey, aged 60, pioneer jeweler of this city, died at his home here after several months' illness. He was a native of Faribault and a graduate of Shattuck. Interment at Osceola, Minn., beside his wife.

Buhl—Several hundred tons of iron ore from the Adams mine, in the Eveleth district, have been shipped to St. Louis, where it will be used in the manufacture of paint.

Moorhead—Buyers are offering 35 and 40 cents per bushel here for U. S. No. 1 potatoes, according to a statement by A. P. Probstfield, secretary of the Northern Potato Growers' Sales company. Demand for the tubers even at that price is slow, he said.

Virginia—An action asking $12,000 damages of the city of Virginia, filed by the A. W. Kerr company, architects, was placed on the calendar for September. The architects allege the city put them to undue expense in the preparation of plans for the new municipal building.

Hibbing—Reductions in every department of the city government will have to be made in the retrenchment campaign if the city is to keep within the law, the expenses will have to be cut more than half. The police force, now more than 50 men, will be cut to 28 and the fire department, which now has three platoons, would be reduced to two.

Excelsior—William Priebe, aged 40, and Henry Eibel, aged 74, who have a summer home at Minnetonka, were injured seriously when the car in which they were driving overturned on Superior boulevard. Both men were pinned beneath the debris.

Buffalo — Application of Henry Hahnke, of Buffalo, to operate a motor bus line between Minneapolis and Litchfield was approved by the Minneapolis city council license committee.

Crosby — Sheriffs, deputies are searching the woods here for two men who represented themselves to be federal agents and robbed the home of Frank Krawl of Cuyune, four miles from here of $800 in cash and jewelry.

CHANGED HER MIND SUDDENLY

Geneva, age three, had run away to visit her aunt, who lived across the street. The aunt visualizing accidents, in which figured little children and automobiles, lectured the little girl.

Then the aunt announced her intention of taking the runaway home at once as a punishment. All entreaties were in vain, the little guest was going to stay, and finally her aunt picked her up, her burden strenuously objecting, and started to the door. There the little girl saw her father just leaving his home on the trail of the fugitive.

Geneva's strident cries of objection died away as she stammered, "I—I must hurry back."—Exchange.

Georgette—Mabel is an attractive girl, isn't she?

Cora—Yes, but you can't trust her.

Georgette—No?

Cora—No. We girls out at the tennis club all bought knickerbockers at the same time, but no one had the nerve to wear 'em out on the courts. So we got together and agreed to come out in knickerbockers all at the same time on a certain Sunday—safety in numbers, you know. And they all stuck to the agreement except Mabel.

Georgette—Backed out, did she?

Design Poppet-Valve Gear.

In an effort to overcome the faults common to the standard types of link-motion valve gears used on locomotives, an Italian engineer has designed a new gear that, in trials, has shown marked economy of coal and water for the power developed, says an illustrated article in Popular Mechanics Magazine. In the new system poppet valves are used to avoid the faults of both the flat slide valve and the piston valve. Advantages claimed are that no strangulation of the steam occurs and more effective use of the power of expansion of the steam is possible.

These Days Are All Alike.

On the Pacific Island of Nauru the sun rises at 6 and sets at 6 the year around; there is no daylight-saving there. The only change of seasons is when the "westerlies" come in the rainy season. These tropical rains descend with great violence. In the year following the three years' drought, there was a rainfall of 150 inches, 10 inches falling in one night.

Young Man—Sir, I have come to demand the hand of your daughter.

Father—Sir! What do you mean, you young—

Father—My! This insolence is unbearable. George, call a policeman.

Young Man—One moment, sir. I know nothing of your affairs, and do not for a moment imagine that you have been guilty of any wrongdoing. The silence to which I alluded is of another sort. I am the young man who practices on the cornet in the boarding house next door.

Father—Oh! Take her, my boy, and be happy.—London Tit-Bits.

EMBARGO ON ALL BUT COAL

START PERMIT SYSTEM

Clerks and Freight Handlers Brotherhood Leaders Have Ordered Strike Vote; Management Fails to Recognize Unions.

New York.—The chief eastern railroads declared a sweeping embargo on freight competing with coal shipments, the New York Central, Erie, Lackawanna and Lehigh Valley issuing orders stopping practically all freight from the west except foodstuffs at connecting points.

This announcement, together with a threatened strike of freight handlers and station employes of the Pennsylvania system, were the most important developments in the eastern railroad situation.

Wouldn't Recognize Union.

The clerks and freight handlers' brotherhood leaders said they were ordering a strike vote because the Pennsylvania management refused to recognize the union.

The New York Central, soon after the embargo was announced, issued a statement to the effect that freight originating on connecting lines beyond its own limits had to be stopped at connecting points because of the congestion which might result from embargoes by other lines.

The statement said the "permit system" inaugurated by President Smith of the New York Central, while he was regional director during the war, again had been put into effect.

Under the permit system, the statement explained, "shippers may apply to the freight traffic manager at Chicago or the general freight agents at New York and secure authorization for the movement of shipments."

MRS. HARDING IMPROVES

Mrs. Harding's Condition Improving Says Attending Physician

Washington.—The situation at the White House remains unchanged. No official statement had been issued, and no informal statement since Dr. Carl Sawyer said Mrs. Harding was getting along very nicely.

It was understood that the patient's improvement was continuing.

Mrs. Harding was said to be "getting along very nicely," by Dr. Carl Sawyer, son of Brigadier General Sawyer. "Her improvement is continuing," he said to newspaper men as he entered an automobile for a ride with Mrs. Sawyer and Chairman Lasker of the shipping board.

President Retires.

The improvement shown in the condition of Mrs. Harding was maintained, according to the offcial bulletin issued by the attending physicians. The patient enjoyed a "most comfortable day," the statement said.

While her temperature remained at 100, Mrs. Harding's pulse had decreased to 90 and her respiration to 28, the bulletin showed. Surgical procedure, it was stated, had been "further deferred awaiting localization of infection."

NORTH DAKOTA RAILROADS CONDITIONS VERY HIGH

Almost $21,000,000 To Good Over the 1921 Statement.

Fargo.—Railroads of North Dakota were almost twenty-one million dollars better off at the end of July, 1922, than they were at the end of July, 1921, according to the statement of the surplus after taxes have been provided for, published in the Financial and Commercial Chronicle of New York.

The four roads which have the largest mileage in North Dakota are the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Great Northern, the Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie, and the Northern Pacific.

Behind Year Ago.

At the nd of August, 1921, the Milwaukee had a half a million surplus over taxes at the end of the August. The Great Northern was three-fourths of a million in the hole, the Soo was a cool million dollars behind and the Northern Pacific was failing to meet its charges for the year by two and a half million.

Each of the roads has had a little better gross earnings for 1922 over that of 1912 for the seven months for which the figures are given, but some of the increased earnings have come from a cutting down of the expenses of the road.

Man Killed In Auto Accident.

Fargo—One man is dead and three injured, one of whom is in a Fargo hospital, as the result of auto accidents at Hunter and Page. Roy Johnson, 24, son of Mr. and Mrs. F. M. A broken steering wheel is believed to have caused the wreck

Whole System Is Benefited by Tanlac

Thousands of frail, nervous people and convalescents everywhere have testified to the remarkable power of Tanlac in bringing back their health, strength and working efficiency. It seems to quickly invigorate the constitution, and is a powerful foe of weakness. Mrs. George G. Owen, of Salem, Oregon, says:

"My nerves were upset and the little I ate wasn't enough to keep up my strength, so I lost weight and became so weak it seemed I had no energy at all. Tanlac restored my health completely, and I gained twelve pounds in weight."

There is not a single portion of the body that is not benefited by the helpful action of Tanlac. It enables the stomach to turn food into healthy blood, bone and muscle, purifies the system and helps you back to normal weight. Get a bottle today at any good druggist.—Advertisement.

LANDLORD WANTED TOO MUCH

Under the Circumstances, Few Men Could Have Been Expected to Carry Out Threat.

"Sir," said a colored man who entered a police station, "I came here to tell you dat I was gwine to suicide."

"Bekase dar was no mo' joys at my house. Am it agin de law to jump into de river?"

"No, not exactly," was the reply. "But if you get out again that is against the law, and you also get very wet, and apt to catch cold over it. You had best find some empty old house and shoot yourself."

"Yes, sir, dat am de way," answered the colored man.

He went out to return in an hour to say:

"You see, I didn't suicide after all. I found de empty house and also found de landlord dar, and he wanted $75 a month rent and $10 extra fur holdin' an inquest."

CRAMPS, PAINS AND BACKACHE

St. Louis Woman Relieved by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

St. Louis, Mo.—"I was bothered with cramps and pains every month and had backache and had to go to bed as I could not work. My mother and my whole family always took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for such troubles and they induced me to try it and it has helped me very much. I don't have cramps any more, and I can do my housework all through the month. I recommend your Vegetable Compound to my friends for female troubles."—Mrs. DELLA SCHOLZ, 1412 Salisbury Street, St. Louis, Mo.

Just think for a moment. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been in use for nearly fifty years. It is prepared from medicinal plants, by the utmost pharmaceutical skill, and superior methods. The ingredients thus combined in the Compound correct the conditions which cause such annoying symptoms as had been troubling Mrs. Scholz. The Vegetable Compound exercises a restorative influence of the most desirable character, correcting the trouble in a gentle but efficient manner. This is noted, by the disappearance, one after another, of the disagreeable symptoms.

Special Care of Baby.

That Baby should have a bed of its own all are agreed. Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for Infants and Children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this:—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

Gold Production in Russia.

The Russian trade delegation reports that Siberia produced during the first four months of the present year over 16 poods (36.1 pound per pood) of gold according to the Engineering and Mining Journal-Press of New York. This quantity is five times greater than the total output for 1921. Gold is worth approximately $10,800 per pood so that the total value is $172,800 or at an annual rate of only a little more than $500,000. This compares with a production of $22,000,000 in 1916 since which time the output has fallen steadily until this slight revival. The gold syndicate has succeeded in restarting the gold mines at Elisatevinsk, Alevandrovsk, Ivanovsk and Youthnotalginsk, which will insure an output of not less than three poods monthly.

Not to Notice It.

"John," said Old Man, thoughtfully, "I don't approve of you running around nights, with all kinds of flappers and flirts. Why don't you settle down and go with some particular girl?" "That's it, dad," said the kid, blithely, "they ain't any of 'em so very particular these days."—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

SIMPLE MATTER TO ARRANGE

All Colored Woman Had to Do Was to Go Home and Wait for Her Next Husband.

A colored woman entered a police station and asked the sergeant at the desk:

"Does you gin any advice here?"

"Sometimes we do," was the reply.

"Den I want you to gin me some. I has got a husband, but he don't amount to much. He has got it in his head dat he wants to go up in de air wid one of dose flyin' machines. If he goes up am he liable to fall?"

"Yes, he is sure to," replied the sergeant.

"An' will be killed?"

"Yes, certainly he will be killed."

"An' den I will be a widow?"

"Yes."

"An' arter a y'ar some smart cull'd man will want to marry me. Now, den, would you encourage my husband to fly?"

"Yes, I think so."

"All right, den," said the colored lady as she made for the door "I will go right home an' encourage my husband to go up among de clouds an' den I will sit down and wait fur my next husband."—Exchange.

Couldn't Steal His Thunder.

Little Michael had been on a visit to his grandmother, who had not been very well.

His father had come to take him home and Michael, as he was leaving, felt that he must be polite.

So he looked up at his grandmother and said:

"Good-by granny. I am so sorry you have been ill!"

Michael felt that this lessened the merit of his remark. So he continued.

"But my sorry is much bigger than his sorry, granny!"

Commercial Arbitration.

Commercial arbitration is making progress in Finland. A court of arbitration at Helsingfors, appointed by the Finnish Central Chamber of Commerce, began with one case in 1911 and has had a steady increase in business to thirty cases in 1921. About three-quarters of the cases turn on trade disputes and the other third raise questions of trade customs.—The Nation's Business.

TECKTONIUS SILO

A Fortune For Every Farmer

WITH the discovery of the wonderful feeding value of the easily grown, yet lowly sunflower with the proper kind of a silo to store and ferment it in, one of the greatest money and labor saving avenues have been opened to the American farmer that has ever been known.

Thousands of farmers are cashing in on this knowledge. They have learned that with this succulent and low cost ensilage when stored in a silo constructed with our quality staves and their saving has been trebled. And not only that, but their profits from milk and butter have been greatly increased.

This combination gives you a silo with the famous TECKTONIUS perfect fitting hinged silo door which always insures air tightness, the wonderful TECKTONIUS Self-adjusting Straight Pull hoop fastener that automatically cares for all contraction and expansion of silo, the incomparable TECKTONIUS anchorage system that insures rigidity at all times and a host of other special features that make the TECKTONIUS stand supreme among silos.

Come in and get our book "Perfect Silage" and let us tell you more about the wonderful possibilities of sunflowers as a profitable feed. You'll readily see why you should start a sunflower crop of your own and erect a TECKTONIUS silo.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. John Olson Sunday morning.

Mrs. Elmer Borchardt of Bellingham, Minn. came Wednesday to visit her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Swan and family.

Miss Gladys Hagen came back from Thief River Falls last week Thursday for a short visit here and at Middle River with relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Erickson and daughter Annie, and Mrs. Gust Erickson all of Thief River Falls were Holt visitors Wednesday.

Sam Mickelson was brot home on Friday from the Thief River Falls hospital and his condition seems to be somewhat improved, we are pleased to report.

Mrs. A. Kuehne of Thief River Falls and her daughter, Mrs. Sauber from Canada, came Monday eve to visit at the home of their daughter and sister, Mrs. H. Peterson.

Misses Inga Johnson and Clara Garthus returned Wednesday from east of Thief River Falls where they were picking potatoes but had to stop for a few days on account of the rain.

R. A. Holmgren took Mrs. Hagberg to Roseau Friday night and the next day she brot Mrs. Holmgren home on the train. The latter is getting along fully as well as could be expected. She is being cared for at her home by her sister, Mrs. Adams.

Mrs. Holmgren will have to be taken back to the Roseau hospital in about three weeks to have the casts removed and a thorough examination again be made of her injuries.

Johnny Sollom was taken worse again Saturday night and was so poorly for a few days that a physician was called from Warren Monday, and most of the family have been home to help care for him.

Theodore and Elmer Sollom and their sister Miss Gunhild, made a trip to Northwood, N. Dak. Tuesday night and got some medicine of Dr. Kirby that seems to help their brother. Dr. Kirby came here Wednesday night to see the sick boy and yesterday he was reported as being better.

Notice!

After October 1st, cream will be received only twice a week at the Holt creamery, namely on Mondays and Thursdays, only.

If ever there was a time when grading of cream meant real money to you it is right now. Butter market to day is slowly crawling up in price, yet the fancy butter is what demands a good price. Butter scoring 88 is worth 9 cents less than butter scoring 93, and a 90 score is worth 4 cents less than a 92 score. In order to get these prices your cream will have to be handled and churned properly after it gets to the creamery, but you patrons must do your share in taking proper care of cream from the time you milk the cow until you deliver it here to the creamery. It is going to mean some real money to you if you will strive to help me in getting cream that will score at least a 91 or 92.

The National Dairy Exposition takes place on the Minnesota State Fair Grounds from Oct. 7th to 14th, inclusive. If you possibly can I wish you would try and attend for a day or two. It is the biggest and best Dairy Show ever put on. Railroad rates are being cut to a fare and a third for the round trip. Hotels are making special prices for people attending the Show.

Why not get a few cars together and go down in a bunch, like most of the farmers are planning on going from our neighboring towns?

P. L. Anderson.

Ole Nygaard went to Climax Wednesday to pick potatoes.

Olson & Spjut are the new publishers of The Strathcona Star. We wish them success.

Olaf Eide went to Thief River Falls Saturday and brot his wife and baby back home from their visit in that city.

H. T. Steves arrived here Tuesday from Wing, N. Dak., to look after his share of the crops on his farm east from town.

Ole Hamernes has purchased the house occupied by Albert Jahr and family, and will go to housekeeping therein as soon as the latter can get their goods moved out.

Mr. and Mrs. Hjalmer Johnson expect to move out of the Central Hotel the first of next month and the Mickelson family expect to move back there at that time.

Thorval Kolden, Oscar Hagglund, Joseph Johnson, Selmer and Lawerence Reierson went to Argyle Wednesday night to try threshing again which was stopped by the heavy rains.

The shoe repair shop is now open and ready for business.

Give me a trial. I am located next to Reierson's store.

S. A. Swanson.

There was a heavy rainfall here Sunday which seemed to be quite general thruout this section. The rain was accompanied by a hard electrical storm in many places. At Thief River Falls an elderly man by the name of Hermanson was killed by lightning, also a man was killed at Plummer and another at Gully by lightning the same day.

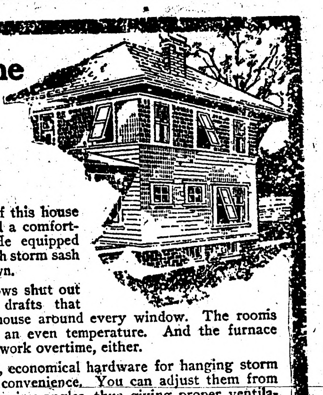
Take the Sting Out of Winter



The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

"Very well, then, the meeting is called to order!" Jachin Fell smiled as he rapped on the desk before him. "Election of officers—no, wait! The first thing on hand is to give our company a name. Suggestions?"

"I was thinking of that last night," said Lucie, smiling a little. "Why not call it the 'American Prince Oil company'?" And her eyes darted to Gramont merrily.

"Excellent!" exclaimed Jachin Fell. "My vote falls with yours, my dear—I'll fill in the blanks with that name. Now to the election of officers."

"I nominate Jachin Fell for president," said Gramont, quickly.

"Any other nominations? If not, so approved and ordered," rattled Fell, laughingly. "For the office of treasurer—"

"Miss Lucie Ledanois!" said Gramont. "Move nominations be closed."

"Seconded and carried by a two-thirds vote of stockholders," chirped Fell in his toneless voice. "So approved and ordered. For secretary—"

"Our third stockholder," put in Lucie. "He'll have to be an officer, of course!"

"Seconded and carried. So approved and ordered." Mr. Fell rapped on the table. "We will now have the report of our expert geologist in further detail than yet given."

Gramont told of finding the oil; he was not carried away by the gay mock-solemnity of Jachin Fell, and he remained grave. He went on to relate how he had secured the lease option upon the adjoining land, and suggested that other such options be secured at once upon other property in the neighborhood. He handed the option to Fell, who laid it with the other documents.

"And now I have a proposal of my own to make," said Jachin Fell. He appeared sobered, as though influenced by Gramont's manner. "Although we've actually found oil on the place, there is no means of telling how much we'll find when we drill, or what quality it will be. Is that not correct, Mr. Gramont?"

"Entirely so," assented Gramont. "The chances are, of course, that we'll find oil in both quality and quantity. On the other hand, the seepage may be all there is. Oil is a gamble from start to finish. Personally, however, I would gamble heavily on this prospect."

"Naturally," said Mr. Fell. "However, I have been talking over the oil business with a number of men actively engaged in it in the Houma field. I think that I may safely say that I can dispose of the mineral rights to our company's land, together with this lease option secured yesterday on the adjoining land, for a sum approximating one hundred and fifty thousand dollars; reserving to our company a sixteenth interest in any oil located on the property. Personally, I believe this can be done, and I am willing to undertake the negotiations if so empowered by a vote of our stockholders. Lucie, you do not mind if we smoke, I know? Let me offer you a cigar, Mr. Gramont."

"I Nominate Jachin Fell for President," Said Gramont Quickly.

Fell's proposal came to him as a distinct shock, and already he was viewing it in the light of prompt suspicion.

"Why," exclaimed Lucie, wild-eyed, "that would be fifty thousand dollars to each of us, and not a cent expended!"

"In case it went through on that basis," added Jachin Fell, his eyes on Gramont, "I would vote that the entire sum go to Miss Ledanois. Her land alone is involved. If she then wishes to invest with us in a new company to exploit other fields, well and good. One moment, my dear! Do not protest this suggestion. The sixteenth interest reserved to our company would provide both Mr. Gramont and me with a substantial reward for our slight activity in the matter. Don't forget that interest, for it might amount to a large figure."

"Right," assented Gramont. "I would second your vote, Mr. Fell; I think the idea very just and proper that Miss Ledanois should receive the entire amount."

Lucie seemed a trifle bewildered.

"But—but, Henry!" she exclaimed. "What do you think of selling the lease to these other men?"

Gramont eyed the smoke from his cigar reflectively, quite conscious that Mr. Fell was regarding him very steadily.

"I can't answer for you, Lucie," he said at last. "I would not presume to advise."

Mr. Fell looked slightly relieved. Lucie, however, persisted.

"What would you do, then, if you were in my place?"

Gramont shrugged his shoulders.

"In that case," he said, slowly, "I would gamble. We know oil is in that ground; we know that it has been found in large quantities at Houma or near there. To my mind there is no doubt whatever that under your land lies a part of the same oil field—and a rich one. To sell fifteen-sixteenths of that oil for a hundred and fifty thousand is to give it away. I would sooner take my chances on striking a twenty-thousand barrel gusher and having the whole of it to myself. However, by all means disregard my words; that is not my affair."

Lucie glanced at Jachin Fell.

"You think it is the best thing to do; Henry does not," mused the girl. "I know that you're both thinking of me—of getting that money for me. Just the same, Uncle Jachin, I—I won't be prudent! I'll gamble! Besides," she added with smiling naivete, "I'm not a bit willing to give up having a real oil company the very minute it is formed! So we'll outvote you, Uncle Jachin."

"That motion of mine has not yet been made," said Fell. Her rejection of his proposal had no effect upon his shyly smooth manner. "Will you excuse us one moment, Lucie? If I may speak with you in the outer office, Mr. Gramont, I would like to show you some confidential matters which might influence your decision in this regard."

Gramont accompanied Fell to the outer office, where Fell sent the stenographer to keep Lucie company. When the door had closed and they were alone, Fell took a chair and motioned Gramont to another. A cold brusquerie was evident in his manner.

"Gramont," he said, briskly, "I am going to make that motion, and I want you to vote with me against Lucie. Unfortunately, I have only a third of the voting power. I might argue Lucie into agreement, but she is a difficult person to argue with. So I mean that you shall vote with me—and I'm going to put my cards on the table before you."

"Ah!" Gramont regarded him coolly. "Your cards will have to be powerful persuaders!"

"They are," returned Jachin Fell. "I have been carefully leading up to this point—the point of selling. I have practically arranged the whole affair. I propose to sell the mineral rights in that land, largely on the strength of the signed statement you gave me a few moments ago. That statement is going to be given wide publicity, and it will be substantiated by other reports on the oil seepage."

"You interest me strangely." Gramont leaned back in his chair. The eyes of the two men met and held in cold challenge, cold hostility. "What's your motive, Fell?"

"I'll tell you: it's the interest of Lucie Ledanois." In the gaze of Fell was a strange earnestness. In those pale gray eyes was now a light of fierce sincerity which startled and warned Gramont. Fell continued with a trace of excitement in his tone.

"I've known that girl all her life, Gramont, and I love her as a father. I loved her mother before her—in a different way. I can tell you that at this moment Lucie is poor. Her house is mortgaged. she does not know, in fact, just how poor she really is. Of course, she will accept no money from me in gift. But for her to get a hundred and fifty thousand in a business deal will solve all her problems, set her on her feet for life!"

"I see," said Gramont with harsh impulse. "What do you get out of it?"

He regretted the words instantly. Fell half rose from his chair as though to answer them with a blow. Gramont, aware of his mistake, hastened to retract it.

"Forgive me, Fell," he said, quickly. "That was an unjust insinuation, and I know it. Yet, I can't find myself in agreement with you. I'm firmly set in the belief that a fortune in oil will be made off that land of Lucie's. I simply can't agree to sell out for a comparative pittance, and I'll fight to persuade her against doing it! As I look at it, the thing would not be just to her. I'm thinking, as you are, only of her interest."

"You are basing your firm conviction," he queried, "very largely upon your discovery of the free oil?"

"To a large extent, yes."

"I thought you would," and Fell laughed harshly.

"What do you mean?"

"I mean," said the other, fiercely earnest, "that for a month I've worked to sell that land! I had young Maillard hooked and landed—it would have been poetic justice to make him hand over a small fortune to Lucie! But that deal is off, since he's in jail. And do you know why young Maillard wanted to buy the land? For the same reason you don't want to sell. I sent him out there and he saw that oil seepage, as I meant that he should! He thought he would skin Lucie out of her land, not dreaming that I had prepared a nice little trap to swallow him. And now you come along—"

"Man, what are you driving at?" exclaimed Gramont. He was startled by what he read in the other man's face.

"Merely that I planted that oil seepage myself—or had it done by men I could trust," said Jachin Fell, calmly. He sat back in his chair and took up his cigar with an air of finality. "The confession is shameless. I love Lucie more than my own ethical purity. Besides, I intend to wrong no one in the matter."

"I See," Said Gramont With Harsh Impulse. "What Do You Get Out of It?"

Gramont sat stunned beyond words. The oil seepage—a plant.

There was no reason to doubt what Fell said. Gramont believed the little man sincere in his love for Lucie.

"No matter what the outcome, your reputation will not be affected," said Fell, quietly. "The company which will buy this land of Lucie's is controlled by me. You understand? Even if no oil is ever found there, I shall see to it that you will not be injured because of that signed statement."

Gramont nodded in dull comprehension. He realized that Fell had devised this whole business scheme with infernal ingenuity; had devised it in order to take a hundred and fifty thousand dollars out of his own pocket and put it into that of Lucie. It was a present which the girl would never accept as a gift, but which, if it came in the way of business, would make her financially independent. Nobody would be defrauded. There was no chicanery about it. The thing was straight enough.

"That's not quite all of my plan," pursued Fell, as though reading Gramont's unuttered thoughts. "The minute this news becomes public, the minute your statement is published, there will be a tremendous boom in that whole section. I shall take charge of Lucie's money, and within three weeks I should double it, treble it, for her. Before the boom bursts she will be out of it all, and wealthy. Now, my dear Gramont, I do not presume that you will still refuse to vote with me? I have been quite frank, you see."

Gramont stirred in his chair.

"Yes!" he said, low-voiced. "Yes, by heavens, I do refuse!"

With an effort he checked hotly impulsive words that were on his tongue. One word now might ruin him. He dared not say that he did not want to see Fell's money pass into the hands of Lucie—money gained by fraud and theft and crime! He dared not give his reasons for refusing. He meant now to crush Fell utterly—but one wrong word would give the man full warning. He must say nothing.

"It's not straight work, Fell. Regardless of your motives, I refuse to join you."

"Gramont," his voice came with the softly purring menace of a tiger's throat-tone, "I shall now adjourn this company meeting for two days, until Saturday morning, in order to give you a little time to reconsider. Today is Thursday. By Saturday—"

"I need no time," said Gramont.

"But you will need it. I suppose you know that Bob Maillard has been arrested for parricide? You are aware of the evidence against him—all circumstantial?"

Plant's Remarkable Growth.

A recent note in science records what is believed to be the temperate zone record for a single season's growth of a shoot of the tree type of woody plant. This quite phenomenal shoot grew from the stump of a beheaded Paulownia and reached a height of 21 feet 6 inches, a circumference of 10 inches at the base, and had 24 leaves, one of which, measured in late July, was found to be 38 inches long in the largest dimension.

DEATH DEFEATS MINERS' RESCUE

Argonaut Mine Yields 47 Decomposed Corpses Despite Efforts of Rescuers.

MEN DID NOT SUFFER

Jackson, Cal.—All 47 of the miners entombed in the Argonaut mine August 27, are dead, it was announced officially, early this week. A note found on one of the bodies indicated that all men had died within five hours of the beginning of the fire, August 27, officials said.

All the miners were found behind the second of two bulkheads they had built in the crosscut 4,350 feet down in the Argonaut mine.

Federal Official Finds Bodies.

Byron M. Pickard, chief of the federal bureau of mines for this district, was the first man to go behind the bulkhead and discovered the bodies.

Pickard, on an earlier exploration behind this bulkhead, had counted 42 bodies and expressed the belief then that there were others there.

The note read as follows:

"3 A. M.—gas bad." The same note bore a scrawled figure "4" apparently indicating the same man had attempted to leave word for those who might come after of the condition of the mine at that hour.

Lives Taken In Few Hours.

Mine officials declared that the condition of the crosscut behind the bulkhead was such that life could not have been sustained there by the entombed men for more than five hours.

The bodies were found piled one on top of another and decomposition had progressed so far that identification would be impossible, Pickard reported.

The mine officials said that the actions of the men, as evidenced by the bulkheads they built and other matters, indicated they had died within five hours after being entombed.

Mute Evidence of Fight.

The officials declared the mute evidence of the men's struggles showed they were 47 of the most cool-headed men imaginable.

Sixteen of the entrapped miners removed their clothing to provide material for stuffing the cracks in the wooden barrier, hastily constructed, which was found early this evening.

Then another barrier was built of rock, earth and debris. However, the gas and fumes from the fire apparently seeped through the first bulkhead and the men fled from the site where they were building the second one, to start a third farther on.

Third Attempt Made.

This third attempt to wall off the death dealing gas was made at the end of the 435-foot crosscut in the Argonaut, but the fact that only a bare start was made at it, proved, the mine officials said, that the deadly carbon monoxide and the suffocating carbon dioxide had reached it and performed their fatal offices before the 47 unfortunates could raise even an excuse for a barrier.

Mine officials said that death had come to the entombed men painlessly. The gases, they said, would produce first a lethargy, then a coma, and finally, death.

Jackson as a whole took the tragic news calmly and courageously.

CANADA ANSWERS WAR CALL

Parliament to Act on British Call for Aid in Near East.

Vancouver, B. C.—British naval reservists, residents here, are being called up for service, it has been stated, orders having been received from London for them to report at once.

Military officers who have served in Mesopotamia and the Near East are reported to have received word to hold themselves in readiness to proceed overseas.

Ottawa—The reply of the Dominion government to the British government, following a cabinet meeting which lasted many hours, was to the effect that public opinion in Canada would demand authority from parliament as a necessary preliminary to the despatch of a contingent of troops to participate in eventualities in the Near East.

London—The British government, despite outcries in the French and Italian press, showed no signs of altering its avowed policy of defending the freedom of the Dardanelles against the Turkish nationalists.

Four Dead Under Backing Freight.

Moorhead, Minn.—Swerving his car as he started across the Great Northern tracks at a Moorhead crossing, A. O. Haroldson, 45, of Twin Valley, Minn., drove his Ford car, carrying himself, wife and three children under the wheels of a backing freight train, resulting in instant death to himself and two children, injuries to his wife which later proved fatal, and serious, if not fatal, injuries to his third child. It was an hour and a half before the mangled bodies were released from the wreckage.

EUROPE FACED BY HOLY WAR

British Troops Preparing To Hold Dardanelles At Any Cost.

RUSSIANS TO AID TURKS

Capitals of Europe in Turmoil as Mustapha Kemal Advances From Near East Upon Turkish Holy City.

London.—With British troops entrenching at strategic points on the Dardanelles, French and Italian battalions rushing to join them, and with word coming from far New Zealand that an Anzac contingent will be dispatched to assist in dealing with the Turkish nationalists, there has been a swift carrying into effect of the allied determination to preserve freedom of the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus.

The British troops are supported by heavy artillery and backed by the fleet, and officials here are confident that the combined allied land and sea forces, which are declared to be prepared for any eventuality, can hold Constantinople against all odds.

To Keep Route Open.

Great Britain is determined to keep the route to the Dardanelles—the passageway from western Europe to India—open at all costs.

In the face of a threat of a holy war, England called on the dominions of the British empire and the Balkan states to stand together in defense of the Dardanelles and Constantinople against Mustapha Kemal.

The gravity of the situation has been brought home to London.

Advance on Constantinople.

In the Near East, where the Turks had turned Smyrna into a city of death and fire, they were advancing on Constantinople as the next step in the reconquest of the territory taken from them by the treaty of Sevres.

Britain's call went out to her dominions and to Greece, Rumania and Serbia, all of whom are invited to participate in keeping the Turkish army from the deadline around Constantinople, the Dardanelles, and the Bosphorus.

War Council Held.

Lloyd George has been in conference in a virtual war council with the various members of the cabinet outlining the proposed line of action. There was no formal session of the cabinet. The premier greeted each member individually.

Not since the days of 1914, when the World war opened, has there been such agitation in government councils of European nations with each side striving to gain powerful allies, according to dispatches.

Turks Look to Bulgars.

The Turks sent emissaries to Sofia to get aid from Bulgaria, and Russian officers are reported to have been seen in Angora, Mustapha's capital, assisting in drawing campaign plans.

Jugo-Slavia is placing troops at strategic points to meet the Turkish advance. Great Britain and Italy are attempting to present an undivided front to the Turkish menace.

FIRST FEDERAL AID RECEIVED

War Finance Corporation Makes First Payment on $5,000,000 Loan.

Grand Forks, N. D.—The war finance corporation has reversed its decision not to honor drafts for the North Dakota Wheat Growers' association pool and the headquarters at Grand Forks has reported the receipt of the first part of the $5,000,000 loan negotiated some time ago.

As a result of this action the North Dakota wheat pool is now able to function. No further trouble is expected.

The first loan from the United States war finance corporation to the North Dakota Wheat Growers' association has arrived in Grand Forks, officials of the North Dakota association announce.

"It was admitted that there were a few days' delay, due merely to technicalities, and officials stated that ample finances will be available hereafter to handle the business with dispatch. To date advances have been made on over 500,000 bushels of grain handled by the association."

Equal Coal Shipments to Northwest.

St. Paul, Minn.—Distribution of coal in the states of Wisconsin, Minnesota and North and South Dakota and upper Michigan will be placed on the same basis of priority as applies when coal is shipped from the mines and from lake points to the northern docks, it was announced here at a meeting of the central states coal committee.

Pastor and Singer Found Dead.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Rev. Edward W. Hall, rector of the Protestant Episcopal church here, and Mrs. James Mills, wife of the sexton of the church, were found dead from bullet wounds under an apple tree in a secluded lane in Somerville township. The two had been missing from their homes for about 36 hours. Coroner R. M. Long, of Somerset county, declared it a case of double murder. He said the two had been dead longer than one day.

Relief Is Found From Stomach Trouble

Hope for the millions of unfortunate men and women who are victims of stomach trouble is sounded by William Hoylen, of 16 Spring St., Bristol, Conn. Mr. Hoylen was a victim of stomach trouble in its worst form, but was completely restored to health by taking Tanlac. He says:

"For fifteen years I had attacks of stomach trouble, and had been in bed for three weeks when I got Tanlac, but three bottles built me up fifteen pounds, and made a well man of me. I am now eating steak and onions, and feel just fine in every way."

Undigested food ferments in the stomach and soon the entire system is filled with poisons. Tanlac was designed to restore the stomach to a healthy condition and build up the whole body. Millions everywhere have acclaimed its wonderful power. Get a bottle today.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Thief River Falls—Samuel T. Johnson, 82 years old, veteran of the civil war, and pioneer in this section, is dead at the family home here.

Chisholm—Three banks of Chisholm served notice on the city council that they would immediately discontinue purchasing village warrants. Funds of the city are near the point of exhaustion.

Crookston—Moorhead was selected as the 1923 meeting place of the ninth district convention of the Degree of Honor lodge at the close of its annual meeting here. Two hundred delegates represented Crookston, Walker, Cass Lake, Moorhead, Breckenridge, Bemidji and Fergus Falls lodges were present.

Crookston—Chicken owners in the river section of Crookston are in quandary. Mink, they declare, are nightly raiding their chicken coops and they are helpless to stop them as the mink are protected by the state game laws.

Luverne—The engine on an ensilage cutter on the farm of Lee English, near here, exploded, hurling parts of the machine more than 200 feet, several of them going through the wall of a concrete silo.

Winona—Chester Pease, 38 years old, serving in the county jail for robbery, has been released and will become an evangelist, delivering his first sermon here next week. He was married in jail last May to Miss Harriet Stahman, Winona school teacher.

Duluth—A general questionaire addresed to Duluth wood yards shows them all oversold. The demand for stove wood, which in normal times, shows a falling off during end of the summer, now shows a heavy increase over all previous years.

Moorhead—Mrs. C. J. Nye and her daughter, Verna, were badly bruised when their car was struck by another on a country road. The driver of the other car is being sought. He refused Mrs. Nye's pleas for medical aid, and drove off.

Pipestone—Carl A. Amundson of Fergus Falls has purchased the Royal hotel here and has taken charge. Mr. Amundson obtained the property from W. A. Barkley of Fergus Falls.

Northfield—Registration figures, incomplete, show an enrollment of 712 students at Carleton college, there being 349 men and 363 women. Registration is continuing.

Fergus Falls—The St. Cloud Crushed Stone company filed a bankruptcy petition in the United States court here today, placing its assets at $80,015.64, of which $78,111.64 is in buildings and machinery, and its liabilities at $164,144.35. Its heaviest creditor is the First National bank of St. Cloud, to which it owes $13,228.

Fairmont—The Fairmont creamery claims the 1922 canning record for Minnesota. The creamery reports an output this year of 40,000 cases of peas and 75,000 cases of corn.

Red Wing—Charles J. Nelson, flagman for the Milwaukee railroad for the past 10 years, dropped dead in his shanty at a crossing here just after flagging a train.

St. Cloud—The city council has authorized the city attorney to prepare an amendment to the taxi ordinance dropping the property damage insurance, but retaining the personal liability feature. The ordinance, as now proposed, will require taxi operators to take out insurance costing $125 yearly, with limits of $5,000 and $10,000.

Owatonna—The Owatonna fuel commission has been formed here, as the result of appointments made by Mayor W. C. Zamboni with F. W. Sawyer as chairman and V. F. Leary as secretary. The commission is conducting a survey of fuel wood resources in Steele county.

St. Cloud—A delegation of 1,000 from the twin cities is expected to attend the state convention of the Federation of German Catholic societies of this city Sept. 24, 25, and 26. Seven societies from St. Paul are planning on coming in a body.

St. Paul—Immigrants to Minnesota and adjacent states shipped thirty-five carloads of livestock, poultry, machinery and household goods through the Minnesota transfer during the month of August, as reported by Oscar H. Smith, State Commissioner of Immigration. Thirteen of the thirty-five carloads were destined to northern Minnesota points, practically all being owned by settlers moving from Iowa, Illinois and Nebraska to new homes in this state. Due to the fact that farmers in the middle west and northwest states are busy completing grain threshing and commencing fall work, August is classed as one of the "low-ebb" months of the year in the matter of moving settlers to new locations, and Mr. Smith looks for an increase in the number coming to Minnesota during September and October.

Redwood Falls—As a feature attraction for the Ramsey state park here, the park board has secured the bulkhead of the battleship Minnesota, and it will be received here soon and mounted on a concrete base inside the main entrance of the park.

Grand Rapids—At a meeting of the county commissioners a resolution was introduced to call for bids on the sale of $110,000 in reimbursement bonds. These bonds are to be sold by Itasca county on Oct. 3, and the funds turned over to the county for use in permanently improving the Babcock highways in this county.

Windom—Dr. A. M. Wright has been bound over to the district court in $5,000 bonds on the charge of having caused the death of Mrs. G. S. Redding by hitting her with his automobile.

Maynard—Water for drinking and cooking purposes is getting more scarce every day in this locality as the wells are giving out one after another, on account of the long continued drouth.

Crookston—Will Ripelle, aged 30, a farmer residing near here, was killed when he fell under the wheels of a Great Northern freight train while attempting to catch a ride. Ripelle's body was cut in two.

Thief River Falls—Orton Olson of this city, last year's winner of first and sweepstakes prizes on wheat at the Crookston farm crop show, has been awarded the blue ribbon prize on wheat at the Central Fair and Exposition, at Aurora, Ill.

Calumet—William Buchanan, of Calumet, committed suicide by shooting after coming home from a dance at 3 a. m. Despondency, brought on by the death of his wife and infant child several months ago is said to have been the cause.

Canby—The Yellow Medicine county fair association has invited every person who lived within 10 miles of Canby through the famous deep snow winter of 1880-1881, to attend the fair on Sept. 16 as guests of the fair management.

St. Cloud—Eighty delegates representing 11 counties, organized the Sixth District Liberty league at a meeting here. The object is to secure legislation for the legal manufacture of light wines and beer.

Crookston—Members of the fourth district Minnesota Creamery Operators, will meet in this city Thursday, Sept. 21. The district embraces a number of the counties of this section of the state.

Winona—One man was shot, another was injured with a club, and three men, said to be strikers, were arrested here for an alleged attempt to interfere with the federal injunction by rioting.

Milaca—The J. A. McDonald Construction company of Minneapolis was awarded the contract for the erection of the new Mille Lacs county courthouse here. The cost will be approximately $150,000.

Minneapolis—Alonzo P. Grace, instructor in anthropology and Americanization worker at the University of Minnesota, has resigned to take a position as head of the social science department of Forestry state normal of North Dakota, he said.

Duluth—Wallace Kurki, aged 4, was run down and killed by an automobile driven by T. M. Perry. Perry was arrested, but later released.

Waterville—The Le Sueur County Baseball league has completed its schedule with the American Legion team of Waterville, winning the pennant.

Ihlen—In order to obtain the services of a resident physician, 200 people signed an agreement to pay a physician $12 a year each. Dr. Lee of Egan, S. D., will undertake the work.

St. Cloud—Mayor W. W. Matson, acting for the conservation of coal, has launched a campaign of publicity through the various local civic organizations. All residents of the city are urged to use as little coal as possible.

St. Cloud—The 21 year search of a mother for the baby snatched from her by her husband has been ended. Through the Red Cross of Pawnee, Okla., Mrs. Harry Inglearengel has found her son, now owner of oil lands in Oklahoma and wealthy.

Pipestone—Five farm homes in one neighborhood, northwest of Pipestone, were ransacked by thieves while members of the family were in this city shopping. In each instance the robbers took only the best wearing apparel.

Winona—Recently when Miss Polzin began to play the piano at her home, a reptile known as a "pilot" rattlesnake crawled out from behind the instrument. Miss Polzin escaped without being bitten.

Stillwater—Residents of South Stillwater are conducting a mail ballot to decide whether to change the name of the village, the desire being to get away from the name "Stillwater." The name Andersenville is popular.

Mountain Lake—This town has no jail but a large refrigerator in a meat market has been made to serve the purpose. Its latest occupant was a Mankato salesman who was placed in the refrigerator to sober up and kept there until his friends produced $40 to settle for damages.

Winona—A reduction in Winona's gas rates from $1.79 to $1.71 per thousand cubic feet has been announced, effective for the next four months.

Duluth—Eight coal-carrying vessels arrived at Duluth and Superior docks between 7 p. m. Saturday and 8 p. m. Sunday, and reports have been received that 50 boats have been chartered to bring coal from Lake Erie ports to the head of the lakes, 26 of which are said to be on the way with cargoes.

Barnum—J. P. Thompson, for 12 years owner and editor of the Barnum Herald, has sold the plant to George E. Sloan, of the Enterprise, at Wahkon, Minn. The latter will move here to take charge of the Herald and Mr. Thompson will go into the chicken raising business.

A traveler from Fiji in the old days reports that at times in the past when the game was first introduced there the Fijians used to get waves of cricket madness, and in some outlying villages—where it was not so readily quelled by law—a match would be kept up for weeks, on end. Incidentally, they wore their pads strapped on their naked, bootless legs with a very ludicrous effect. But evidently the Fijians have no sense of the ludicrous, for our traveler further reports: "Another distinguishing mark that rather amused me once up-country was when my house boy, Esau, came in one day with his hair cut away from one side of his head, looking like a somewhat weird 'parting,' for the remainder stood up as usual like a bass broom with bristles five inches long. I asked him what on earth he had been doing and he replied: "Sir, I am now a member of the Lomaloma "A" team, and we have agreed to cut our hair like this, as the store cannot get 11 sashes all the same color.'"—London Tit-Bits.

Waited Long for Fortune.

He might have been rich 15 years ago, but a Belgian who purchased a bond in 1903 hadn't applied for the list of numbers drawn in state lotteries in 1907. A poor man from the country happening to be in Antwerp for the first time for many years, entered the offices of the Caisse Communale to see if the bond which he had taken out in the loan of 1903 had won a prize in the yearly lottery. After waiting impatiently while the cashier searched the records he was informed that his number had been drawn in 1907, and that he was entitled to a bonus of 200,000 francs ($40,000 at normal exchange rates).

Youngstown, Ohio.—"Last fall I began to feel mean and my back hurt me and I could hardly do my little bit of housework. I was played out when I would just sweep one room and would have to rest. I would have to put a cushion behind me when I would sit down and at night I could not sleep unless I had something under my back. I had awful cramps every month and was just nearly all in. Finally my husband said to me one day, 'Why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's medicine?' and I said, 'I am willing to take anything if I could get well again.' So I took one bottle and a second one and felt better and the neighbors asked me what I was doing and said, 'Surely it must be doing you good all right.' I have just finished my eighth bottle and I cannot express to you how I feel, the way I would like to. If you can use this letter you are welcome to it and if any woman does not believe what I have written to be true, she can write to me and I will describe my condition to her as I have to you."—Mrs. ELMER HEASLEY, 141 S. Jackson St., Youngstown, Ohio.

"I was very nervous and run-down," writes Mrs. L. E. Wiese of 706 Louisa St., New Orleans, La. "I would often sit down and cry, and was always blue and had no ambition. I was this way for over a year and had allowed myself to get into quite a serious condition. One day I saw your advertisement in the daily paper and began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once. I have improved ever since taking the third bottle and find it is the best medicine I have ever taken."

Benefited by First Bottle

"I was completely run down and not able to do my housework. I just dragged myself around and did not have energy to get up when once I sat down. I read advertisements of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in our paper 'The Indiana Daily Times,' and learned all about it. I received results from the very first bottle and now I am doing all my own work, even washing and ironing, and I never felt better in my life. I tell all my friends it is due to you."—Mrs. ELIZABETH REINBOLD, 403 N. Pine St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

You should pay heed to the experiences of these women. They know how they felt before taking the Vegetable Compound, and afterwards, too. Their words are true.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts.

AT LEAST GUILTY OF LYING

Truly Clergyman Had Refrained From Blasphemy, but He Had Sinned in Another Direction.

A clergyman who years ago settled in Massachusetts once reproved a workman for swearing while he was plowing a new field.

"Swear!" said the man. "I guess you'd swear!"

Whereupon the preacher took the plow and hurried after it, indignantly denying the charge. Then, as the field became more impassable, he began panting:

"I never saw the like! I never saw the like!" When he had gone once round the field he stopped, breathless, and added:

"There, you see I didn't find it necessary to swear."

"No," said the other, "but you've told more'n 50 lies. You said you never did see the like, and you saw it all the time I was plowin'."

Wouldn't Be Wasted.

During a snowstorm early in spring Jack with his shaggy-haired dog, Turk, came upon our porch to shovel off the snow.

Hearing the noise I opened the door to find Turk sitting up begging for something, so I asked Jack what he wanted.

"He wants bread and butter."

I said. "Do you think he would eat it if I got it for him?"

"Well, if he don't I will," was the answer.—Exchange.

Not to Be Cheated.

Grandfather and Betty were paying a visit to the strawberry patch. He picked some small, luscious berries and fed them to the little girl. For himself he found much larger ones. Betty watched him for a few moments, and then said, gravely: "Grandfather, I can eat the large ones, too."

Opportunity is rare, and a wise man will never let it go by him.

NOTHING WORSE IN PROSPECT

Traveler Satisfied He Had Got Over the Most Uncomfortable Part of His Journey.

W. S. Inglis, the well-known coal operator, told a railroad story at a railroad men's banquet in Scranton.

"There used to be a little line," he said, "a branch line about 12 miles long, that was notorious for its bumps, general discomfort and dirt.

"A train on this line pulled into town one morning, late half an hour, as usual, and a man said as he rose and brushed himself off:

"'Goin' far?' said another man.

"'Hong Kong, China,' said the first chap."

Landor the Explorer.

Henry Savage Landor has a splendid record as an explorer. He was the first known white man to reach both sources of the Brahmaputra river of India and established their exact positions in Thibet. His exploration tours in the Himalayas also yielded a vast store of information. He later spent a whole year cruising among and studying the Philippine islands.

With a single partner, Mr. Landor traveled 3,800 miles on a pack saddle through Corea. Later he turned his attention to Africa spending several years there and then again changing his scene of action to South America where he traveled almost continuously until 1914.

Another Darned Cynic

"Why is Johnson looking so down in the mouth?"

"The poor fellow was disappointed in love."

"Of course it never does come up to one's expectations.'

Grape-Nuts
A FOOD

Life Partners

THE union of Nature, Science and the Farmer is a partnership for life.

In the golden sheaves of living wheat and in the waving, shimmering fields of barley—Nature stores the vital elements of human power and energy which Science converts into Grape-Nuts—the famous body-building food.

Grape-Nuts with milk or cream is a complete food, which contains all the nutrition (including the mineral elements) required for making rich, red blood, and for building sturdy body tissue, sound bone structure and strong, healthy nerve cells.

The 20-hour baking process makes Grape-Nuts easy to digest and develops that delicious, sweet flavor and crispness that has made this food a favorite the world over.

Two hundred and twenty-four people were killed in automobile accidents in Minnesota in 1921. Railroad accidents caused the death of 136, all other accidents 1088. There were 312 people who committed suicide, and 7,376 died of diseases. Yet a great many people give little or no thought to God or the future life, but apparently seem to think they are going to live here on earth forever.

There is grave danger of another great war in Europe. Where is The League of Nations now,- and where would we be had we joined them?

Nearly all of the railroad shopmen and the coal miners have gone back to work again. Neither side won in either of these strikes, and all were loosers:

The week of Sept. 25 to Oct. 1st has been set as Diversified Farming Week. If you can get em started Jake keep em going for a year and then you could'nt stop 'em.

The first effect of the Federal Farm Loan system was to lower interest rates all over the country. But that agency thus far has been able to take over only 10 percent of the farm mortgage business in Minnesota. Farmers need the help that adoption of Amendment No. 1, will give in the way of lower rates of interest.

Give Them Good Winter Quarters

The summer and fall selling season for hogs is just about over. Of course, you will keep some of the best stock to make a start next year.

See that the hog house is comfortable for these money-makers during the cold winter months. Good buildings are a short-cut to greater profit whether you raise fancy or ordinary stock.

And don't forget that fall is the ideal season to make a start on any farm building—whether it's a new barn, new corn crib or machine shed. It will pay you to do your repair work, too.

Winton-Nichols Lbr' Co.
C. L. Sandberg, Agent, Holt, Minn.

The Year 'Round Profit

Chickens yield a bigger profit the year 'round if properly housed. They are better producers during the cold winter months if the poultry house is sunny, roomy, well ventilated, well constructed and if good drainage has been provided.

Our experience in supplying all kinds of material for poultry houses will help you in your plans for any new buildings of this kind.

Come in and talk it over. Ask our help on any building problem.

P. B. Malberg for Co. Auditor

Having received the nomination for the office of County Auditor of Marshall County, and having very little time to personally visit the voters, I have to depend upon my old and new friends for their support and votes at the coming general election Nov. 7th, 1922.

Whatever you can and will do for me will be appreciated, and if you vote for and elect me, I shall do my very best to look after yours and the taxpayers interests carefully, efficiently and cheerfully, to the best of my ability.

Sincerely yours,
P. B. Malberg.

Political Advertising ordered inserted by Peter E. Kvikstad and to be paid for by him at regular rates.

To The Voters of Marshal County:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of Clerk of District Court of Marshall County.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on Election Day, November 7, 1922.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me; and if you elect me I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of Clerk of Court carefully and impartially to all.

Respectfully yours,
Peter E. Kvikstad.

Notice!

After October 1st, cream will be received only twice a week at the Holt creamery, namely on Mondays and Thursdays, only.

If ever there was a time when grading of cream meant real money to you it is right now. Butter market to day is slowly crawling up in price,- yet the fancy butter is what demands a good price. Butter scoring 88 is worth 9 cents less than butter scoring 93, and a 90 score is worth 4 cents less than a 92 score. In order to get these prices your cream will have to be handled and churned properly after it gets to the creamery, but you patrons must do your share in taking proper care of cream from the time you milk the cow until you deliver it here to the creamery. It is going to mean some real money to you if you will strive to help me in getting cream that will score at least a 91 or 92.

The National Dairy Exposition takes place on the Minnesota State Fair Grounds from Oct. 7th to 14th, inclusive. If you possibly can I wish you would try and attend for a day or two. It is the biggest and best Dairy Show ever put on. Railroad rates are being cut to a fare and a third for the round trip. Hotels are making special prices for people attending the Show.

Why not get a few cars together and go down in a bunch, like most of the farmers are planning on going from our neighboring towns?

P. L. Anderson.

Mrs. Jacob Nelson has not been quite so well the past week, but all hope she will soon be better again.

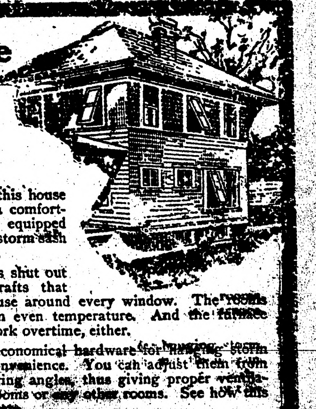
Take the Sting Out of Winter



The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

Gramont frowned. "What has that got to do with our present business?"

"Quite a bit, I fancy." A thin smile curved the lips of Jachin Fell. "Maillard is not guilty of the murder—but you are."

"Liar!" Gramont started from his chair as those three words burned into him. "Liar! Why, you know that I went home—"

"Ah, wait!" Fell lifted his hand for peace. His voice was calm. "Ansley and I both saw you depart, certainly. We have since learned that you did not reach home until some time after midnight. You have positively no alibi, Gramont. You may allege, of course, that you were wandering the streets—"

"As I was!" cried Gramont, heatedly.

"Then prove it, my dear fellow; prove it—if you can. Now, we shall keep Lucie out of all this. What remains? I know that you were the Midnight Masquer. My man, Ben Chacherre, can prove by another man who accompanied him that the Masquer's loot was taken from your car. A dictograph in the private office, yonder, has a record of the talk between us of the other morning, in which you made patent confession to being the Masquer.

"Once let me hand this array of evidence over to the district attorney, and you will most certainly stand trial. And, if you do stand trial, I can promise you faithfully that you will meet conviction. I have friends, you see, and many of them are influential in such small matters."

Gramont choked back any response, holding himself to silence with a firm will. He dared say nothing, lest he say too much. He saw that Fell could indeed make trouble for him—and that he must strike his own blow at Fell without great delay. It was a battle, now; a fight to the end.

"Further," he added, "your man Hammond is now in jail at Houma, as you know, for the murder of the sheriff. Now, my influence is not confined to this city, Gramont; I may be able to clear Hammond of this charge—if you decide to vote with me. I may keep what I know about the Midnight Masquer from the press and from the district attorney—if you decide to vote with me. You comprehend?"

Gramont nodded. He saw now why Fell wanted to "get something" on Hammond. Fell had rightly reasoned that Gramont would do more to save Hammond than to save himself.

"You think I murdered Maillard, then?" he asked.

"Gramont, I don't know what to think, and that's the honest truth!" answered Fell, with a steady regard. "But I am absolutely determined to put this oil deal across, to make Lucie Ledanois at least independent, if not wealthy. I can do it, I've made all my plans to do it, and—I will do it!

"We'll hold another meeting day after tomorrow—Saturday morning." Fell rose. "That will give me time to conclude all arrangements. I trust, Mr. Gramont, that you will vote with me for the adjournment?"

"Yes," said Gramont, dully. "I will."

"Thank you," and Jachin Fell bowed slightly, not without a trace of mockery in his air.

CHAPTER XIII.

The Coin Falls Heads.

Gramont sat in his own room that afternoon. It seemed to him that he had been away from the city for weeks and months. Yet only a day had intervened. He sat fingering the only piece of mail that had come to him—a notice from the post of the American Legion which he had joined, to the effect that there would be a meeting that Thursday evening. Only Thursday! And tomorrow was Friday.

If he was to effect anything against the headquarters of Fell's gang he must act on the morrow or not at all. Gumberts was to be out there tomorrow. Gumberts would talk with the ratty little man of the projecting teeth and adenoids, would find Gramont had imposed upon the fellow, and there would be upheavals. The gang would take to flight, certainly, or at least make certain that Gramont's mouth was shut.

He sat fingering the postal from the Legion, and turning over events in his mind. Against Fell he had no particular animosity. All that the little gray man had done had been done with the thought of Lucie Ledanois as a spur.

"If I'm to strike a blow, I'll have to do it tomorrow—before noon tomorrow, also. I'll have to leave here mighty early, and get there before Gumberts does. What was it Hammond said that day about him—that nobody in the country had ever caught Memphis Izzy? I bet I could do it, and his whole gang with him—if I knew how. There's the rub! Fell won't hesitate a minute in having me arrested. And as he said, once he got me arrested, I'd be gone. He must be able to exert a powerful influence, that man!"

Should he strike or not? If he struck, he might expect the full weight of Jachin Fell's vengeance—unless his blow would include Fell among the victims.

Gramont was still pondering this dilemma when Ben Chacherre arrived.

Gramont heard the man's voice on the stairs. Ben's impudence, perhaps added to his name and the Creole French upon his lips, had carried him past the concierge unannounced, although not without a continued exchange of repartee that served to give Gramont warning of the visitor. Smiling grimly, Gramont drew a coin from his pocket, and flipped it.

The coin fell heads. He pocketed it again as Ben Chacherre knocked, and opened the door.

"Ah, Chacherre!" he exclaimed. "Come in."

Ben swaggered inside and closed the door.

"Brought a message for you, Mr. Gramont," he said, jauntily, and extended a note.

Gramont tore open the envelope and read a curt communication:

"Kindly let me know your answer as soon as possible. By tomorrow evening at latest. It will be necessary to arrange affairs for Saturday.

"JACHIN FELL."

To arrange affairs! Fell was taking for granted that Gramont would give an assent, under force of persuasion, to the scheme. He would probably have everything in readiness, and if assured by Friday night of Gramont's assent, would then pull his strings and perhaps complete the whole deal before the following Monday.

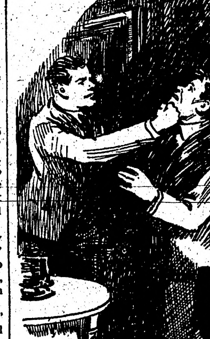
The meeting of the company had been adjourned to Saturday morning. Gramont thought a moment, then went to his buhl escritoire and opened it. Chacherre had already taken a seat. Gramont wrote:

"My Dear Mr. Fell:

"If you will arrange the company meeting for tomorrow evening, say nine o'clock, at your office, I think that everything may then be arranged. As I may not see Miss Ledanois in the meantime, will you be kind enough to assure her presence at the meeting?"

He addressed an envelope to Fell's office, and then stamped and pocketed it.

"Well, Chacherre," he said, rising and returning to the Creole, "any further news from Houma? They haven't found the real murderer yet?"



As He Did So, Gramont's Fist Caught Him Squarely on the Point of the Jaw.

The other came to his feet with an exclamation of surprise. As he did so, Gramont's fist caught him squarely on the point of the jaw.

"I'm afraid to take any chances with you, my fine bird," said Gramont, rubbing his knuckles. "You're too clever by far, and too handy with your weapons."

He obtained cloths, and firmly bound the ankles and wrists of Chacherre. Not content with this, he placed the man in the chair and tied him to it with merciless knots. As he was finishing his task, Chacherre opened his eyes and gazed dazedly around.

"Awake at last, are you?" said Gramont, genially. He got his pipe, filled and lighted it. The eyes of Chacherre were now fastened upon him venomously. "To bad for you, Chacherre, that the coin fell heads up! That spelled action."

"Are you crazy?" muttered the other in French. Gramont laughed, and responded in the same tongue.

"It does look that way, doesn't it? You're slippery, but now you're caught."

Chacherre must have realized that he stood in danger. He checked a curse, and regarded Gramont with a steady coolness.

"Be careful!" he said, his voice deadly. "What do you mean by this?"

Gramont looked at him and puffed his pipe.

"The game's up, Ben," he observed. "I know all about the place down there—about the cars, and about the lottery. Your gang has had a pleasant time, eh? But now you and the others are going to do a little work for the state on the road gangs."

"Bah! Ca va rive semaine quatte zheudis!" spat Chacherre, contemptuously. "That will happen in the week of four Thursdays, you fool! So you know about things, eh? My master will soon shut your mouth!"

"So?" queried Gramont, his brows lifted. "You seem much in Mr. Fell's confidence, Ben. But I think I'll leave you tied up a little while. Memphis Izzy is going down to his summer cottage tomorrow, isn't he? I'll be there—but you won't. By the way, I think I'd better look through your pockets."

The latter, unheeding the contortions of his captive, searched the man thoroughly. Except for a roll of money, the pockets gave up little of interest. The only paper Gramont secured was a fresh telegraph blank. He would have passed this unheeded had he not noted a snaky flitting of Chacherre's eyes to it.

"Ah!" he said, pleasantly. "You appear to be interested in this, Ben. Pray, what is the secret?"

Chacherre merely glared at him, and a sudden exclamation broke from him. He held the bit of yellow paper to the light at varying angles.

"It's the most natural thing in the world," he said after a moment, "for a man to walk into a telegraph office, write out a telegram, and then find that he's torn two blanks instead of one from the pad on the desk. Eh? I've done it, often—and I've always put the extra blank into my pocket, Ben, thinking it might come in handy; just as you did, eh? Now, let's see!

"You were excited when you wrote this, weren't you? You'd just thought of something very important, and you took care of it hurriedly—that made you jab down your pencil pretty hard. Who's Dick Hearne at Houma? An agent of the bang there?"

"Burn bundle under rear seat my car. Have done at once."

Gramont looked up and smiled thinly.

"Your car? Why, you left it in the garage at Gumberts' place, eh? That little roadster of Fell's, with the extra seat behind. If you'd been just a little bit cooler yesterday, Ben, you would have made fewer mistakes. It never occurred to you that other people might have been there in the bushes when the sheriff was murdered, eh?"

Chacherre went livid.

"It was another mistake to throw away your knife after you killed him," pursued Gramont, reflectively. "You should have held on to that knife, Ben. There's no blood, remember, on Hammond's knife—a hard thing for you and your friends to explain plausibly. Yet your knife is heavy with blood, which tests will show to be human blood. Also, the knife has your name on it; quite a handsome knife, too. On the whole, you must admit that you bungled the murder from start to finish—"

Chacherre broke in with a frightful oath—a frantically obscene storm of curses. So furious were his words that Gramont very efficiently gagged him with cloths, gagged him hard and fast.

"I think that I'll send another wire to Dick Hearne on this blank which you so thoughtfully provided. I'll order him, in your name, not to burn that bundle after all; I fancy it may prove of some value to me. And I'll also tell your friend—I suppose he has some familiar cognomen, such as Slippery Dick—to meet Henry Gramont at Houma early in the morning. I'd like to gather Dick in with the other gentlemen. I'll mention that you were kind enough to supply a few names and incidents."

At this last Ben Chacherre writhed anew, for it was a shrewd blow. He and his friends belonged to that class of crook which never "peaches." If by any mischance one of that class is jailed and convicted, he invariably takes his medicine silently, knowing that the whole gang is behind him, and that when he emerges from prison he will be sure to find money and friends and occupation awaiting him.

To know that he would be placed, in the estimation of the gang, in the same class with stool-pigeons, must have bitten deeper into Ben Chacherre than any other lash.

Gramont, meantime, was writing out the telegram to Dick Hearne. This finished, he got his hat and coat, and from the bureau drawer took an automatic pistol, which he pocketed. Then he smiled pleasantly at his prisoner.

"This evening, Ben, I think that I'll attend a meeting of my post of the American Legion. You don't belong to that organization by any chance? No, I'm quite sure you don't. Very few of your exclusive acquaintances do belong. Well, see you later! Work on those bonds all you like—you're quite safe. I'm curious to see what is in that bundle under the rear seat of your car; I have an idea that it may prove interesting. Good afternoon!"

Going downtown, he mailed the letter to Fell, confident that the latter would receive it on the following morning; but he did not telephone Fell. He preferred to leave the absence of Chacherre unexplained, rightly judging that Fell would not be particularly anxious about the man. It was now Thursday evening. The meeting of the oil company would be held at nine on Friday evening. Between those two times Gramont figured on many things happening.

NEAR EAST WAR ENDED IS REPORT

British Capitol Optimistic Over Outlook for Peaceful Settlement of Question.

ARMIES STILL ON MOVE

Prolonged Negotiations Expected Because of "Trading Propensities" of Ottoman Diplomats—Lord Curzon Smiles.

Constantinople—Maj. Gen. Frederick B. Maurice, who for a long period during the war was chief director of military operations at the war office in London and now is the military expert of a London newspaper, has said:

"The war is over. Kemal will accept the allied proposals with reservations. He is just as anxious for peace as the allies, but one must not take him too lightly.

"Kemal has an army of 180,000 that may be regarded as fighting troops. It would take a good deal to defeat the Kemalists, but I am so confident of peace that I am leaving for England in a few days."

London—Smiles, which wreathed Lord Curzon's face as he departed from the prime minister's offical residence in Downing street, after making a detailed report to the cabinet of his Paris mission, typified the general easing up of the tenseness in the Near East situation as viewed from the British capital.

Expect Prolonged Parley.

Everywhere in official circles here are expressions of relief that the war crises of last week have been replaced by old school diplomacy with such an old hand as Curzon directing British policy, and although there is no word that the allied note has yet been delivered to Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the nationalist leader, it is intimated that his refusal to come to terms is extremely unlikely.

The view is held in authoritative allied circles that immediate acceptance would be against Turkish "trading propensities." It is said said that the Turk in bargaining diplomatically or otherwise always wants a first offer made to him. Then he holds the other to it and angles for further concessions. The allies have made Kemal Pasha a definite offer of Constantinople, Thrace to the Maritza river and membership in the League of Nations, but it is believed that Kemal will probably reply with a demand for all of eastern Thrace and complete retirement of the Britsh from the neutral zones before the Turks enter into a peace conference.

It is taken for granted, however, both in Paris and London that no reply will be forthcoming from the nationalist leader until he sees M. Franklin Boullon, the French envoy, who is expected to reach Smyrna this week.

Armies Still Moving.

That all danger is not past is evident from dispatches reporting a new Kemalist incursion in the Chanak zone, necessitating a further warning from the British commander there.

WHISKY HELD NEAR BORDER

Portal, N. D.—Six carloads of bonded whisky, each car containing 1,000 cases, in custody of the Soo line agent here, has been seized by federal prohibton officers. The liquor is estimated to be worth more than a quarter milion dollars. They are awaiting orders from the prohibition department at Washington, D. C., as to disposition of the liquor. One of the officers said there were three alternatives:

Two, return of the shipment to the Hill & Hill distilleries at Owensboro, Ky., the shippers.

Three, release of the liquor for undelayed shipment to its orignal destination, the National Bell Drug company at Vancouver, B. C.

There is talk here that the shipments offer a regular "bonanza" for high jackers as the guard at the railroad yards would be entirely inadequate to deal with a band of booze runners who have an "ear to the ground" when liquor is being shipped.

Three carloads of the liquor arrived here early this week. The other three cars have been held for about a week. No formal action regarding the shipment has been taken by customs officials here, it was reported.

Lake Sailors Quit Jobs.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Nearly a score of sailors on ships saling from Buffalo have quit, according to William Stark, business agent of the sailors' union of the Great Lakes. The men walked out, he said, in anticpation of a strike call which fixed October 1 as the date for a general walkout of sailors. Shipping men said that no boats had been crippled seriously. Mr. Stark predicted in the strike on Sunday. This will tie up the big fleet of the Lake Carriers' association.

RUSS MOBILIZE FOR NEAR EAST

Cars Being Made Ready for Transportation of Troops and Ammunition.

EARLY PEACE IS SEEN

Russia Prepares to Aid Turks in Near East as France and England Make Plans for Immediate Peace Turkish Claims Allowed.

Riga—It is reported on apparently good authority that the soviet Russian council for labor and defense has been ordered to prepare the maximum quantity of rolling stock available for the transportation of troops and munitions. A portion of the freight cars intended for the Petrograd, Reval and Riga trade has already been diverted, it is declared.

British Demands Reported Modified.

Constantinople—It has been reported that Great Britain had so modified her policy as to permit the Kemalists to occupy Thrace with small forces.

The British are withdrawing their forces from the neutral zone of Ismid and transferring them to Chanak to strengthen the positons on the bank of the Dardanelles so as to meet all possible emergencies.

Prospects of Peace Held High.

Paris—The return of Turkey to Europe was assured when Great Britain, France and Italy at the final session of the Allied conference unanimously agreed to concede all the Nationalist policy terms.

The Turkish claims to eastern Thrace to the Maritza river, including the ancient Turkish capital of Adrianople, were approved as peace terms that can be supported by France, Great Britain and Italy in a joint invitation sent to Mustapha Kemal Pasha, the nationalist leader, to a peace conference to be held at Venice at the earliest possible date.

Conditions of Pact.

The Kemalists must agree in return not to enter the present neutral zone along the straits, nor make any crossing elsewhere, and must accept complete freedom of the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus, preferably under the League of Nations.

The invitation, which was cabled by M. Poincare to Kemal Pasha personally urges an immediate meeting of the Allies and Turkish and Greek generals at Mudania to formulate terms of an armistice pending the conference.

It is regarded as virtually certain that Kemal will accept the conditions and a reply is expected from Smyrna in a day or two.

Promised Allied Support.

In additon to other concessions, Turkey is promised the support of the three Allies for an admission to the League of Nations and also withdrawal of the allied troops from Constantinople as soon as peace becomes effective.

The allied decision came as a big surprise, for British officials had declared that Great Britain would not approve any of the Turkish claims in advance of the peace conference. The change in this policy came after an exchange of many messages between Lord Curzon and Premier Lloyd George and many telephone messages.

SIX KILLED IN PLANE CRASH

Machine Was Inspected Just Before Flight and Cause Will Not Be Known.

Mineola, N. Y.—First Lieutenant Raymond E. Davis, United States army air service, and five enlisted men were killed when a huge Martin bombing plane crashed to earth at Mitchell field.

The enlisted men killed were: First Sergeant Thomas Benfield, Corporal David H. Stiven and Privates Edward H. Kane, Henry Ray Nichols and Irving M. Whitney, all stationed at Mitchell field.

A report of the accident, as given out several hours later by the adjutant's office at the field, said that the plane had been inspected shortly before leaving the field and that the cause of the fatal accident "probably never would be known."

Several spectators who saw Lieutenant Davis go up with his passengers in the Martin bombing plane said later they did not expect to witness any notable "stunts" such as the lighter and more easily handled DeHavilands performed.

When he was some distance up, however, he was seen to go into a nose dive, from which he was evidently unable to recover. Men familiar with aircraft said that they believed both motors were wide open when the big plane struck the ground.

British-American Conference Soon.

Washington—A number of important international problems, including the activities of the prohibition navy and perhaps the question of the Near Eastern disturbances, are to be discussed here in the very near future between representatives of the American and British governments. Sir Auckland Geddes, the British ambassador, has returned to Washington and is understood to be prepared for a series of conferences with American officials early this week.

Rheumatism and Dyspepsia Are Soon Ended

Victims of stomach trouble and rheumatism often find that when their stomach is set in order, the rheumatism disappears. Thousands of people everywhere have testified that Tanlac has freed them of both troubles simultaneously. Mr. Robert Trotter, 148 State St., St. Paul, Minn., says:

"About a year ago I began to go down hill. Sour stomach and rheumatism in my arms and shoulders kept me in misery all the time. Since taking Tanlac all my aches and pains have gone, and my stomach is in fine shape. I'm glad to endorse such a fine medicine."

Badly digested food fills the whole system with poisons. Rheumatism and many other complaints not generally recognized as having their origin in the stomach quickly respond to the right treatment. Get a bottle today at any good druggist.—Advertisement.

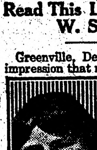
Shy on Railroads.

Though of approximately the same area, Australia has only 26,000 miles of railways to the United States' 250,000.

MOTHERS AND DAUGHTERS

Read This Letter from Mrs. W. S. Hughes

Greenville, Del.—"I was under the impression that my eldest daughter had some internal trouble as ever since the first time her sickness appeared she had to go to bed and even had to quit school once for a week. I always take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound myself so I gave it to her and she has received great benefit from it. You can use this letter for a testimonial if you wish, as I cannot say too much about what your medicine has done for me and for my daughter."—Mrs. WM. S. HUGHES, Greenville, Delaware.



Mothers and oftentimes grandmothers have taken and have learned the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. So they recommend the medicine to others.

The best test of any medicine is what it has done for others. For nearly fifty years we have published letters from mothers, daughters, and women, young and old, recommending the Vegetable Compound. They know what it did for them and are glad to tell others. In your own neighborhood are women who know of its great value.

Mothers—daughters, why not try it?

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is prescribed by physicians; used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

KEEPS GIRL TWO YEARS IN SHED

Father, Found Guilty of Extreme Cruelty, Declares She Would Not Behave.

INSANITY IS RESULT

Long Confinement Nearly Deprives the Young Woman of Sight and Speech—Causes Big Sensation in Community.

Bucyrus, Ohio.—Jacob P. Menges, charged with keeping his twenty-six-year-old daughter, Irene, in a dingy smokehouse for two years because she "wouldn't behave," has been found guilty of excessive cruelty by a jury in Judge Rummels' court. The girl, said to have been driven insane by the long confinement, is now an inmate of the State hospital at Toledo.

The case grew out of the fact that on May 5, Sheriff Edward J. Knappenberger went to the Menges home, midway between Galion and Crestline, and found the girl, partly nude, in a smokehouse near the barn. The shed contained little but a cot and blanket.

Irene was brought to Bucyrus, where she was cared for by Mrs. Knappenberger, wife of the sheriff. She was reported to show signs of long neglect. May 16 she was sent to the State hospital and Menges was arrested on a state warrant charging cruelty.

Family Fought Raiders.

Chester A. Meck, Crawford county prosecutor, states that the case is brought under state law, making the finding of the justice court final.

The release of Irene attracted widespread attention, as the statements made by county officials at the time revealed that the girl had been a prisoner in the shack for a long time, reports as to the duration of her captivity varying from two to six years.

Members of the party raiding the Menges home met opposition and interference from members of the family. The girl was passive, accepting relief without a syllable.

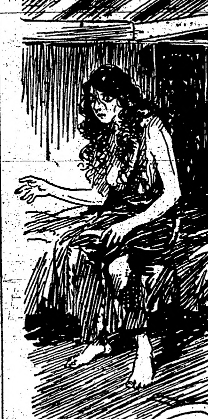
When she was brought to the Crawford county jail here she remained inert, and her only words were a few brief acknowledgments of thanks for the acts of kindness shown to her.

Released From Asylum.

Under the care of the sheriff's wife she brightened noticeably, but showed little response to attempts to induce her to explain her captivity in the shed.

State records obtained by authorities here revealed that Irene had been confined in the Toledo institution in 1914, but released as being mentally competent June 30, 1915.

At the trial of Menges his wife denied testimony of Mrs. Knappenberger as to the condition of Irene at the time of her arrival at the jail. On the stand Mrs. Menges declared that the sheriff's wife had exaggerated the facts. Menges was fined $100 and sentence of six months in jail suspended.



Kept In a Dingy Smokehouse.

OPERATE ON MAN IN MIDAIR

Doctors Mount Ladder to Scaffold in Attempt to Save the Life or Injured Laborer.

London.—Three doctors had to mount a ladder and walk a plank 40 feet above the ground to perform an operation in a vain attempt to save the life of a man entangled in some machinery at Burton-on-Trent.

The man, Thomas Phillips, at work on a scaffold, had one of his legs trapped in a grain conveyor and the limb was being mangled by a revolving shaft with projecting blades. It was impossible to extricate him from his position, 40 feet above ground.

The leg was removed at the thigh and the patient lowered to the ground and rushed to a hospital.

CASSOWARY BIRD WAYS

"Yes," said the Cassowary, "it is true that I am a curious looking bird. In fact you might not even call me a bird when you first looked at me for I'm walking about the ground and I'm not flying above the ground.

"But I am a bird just as the Ostrich family and others are birds, though they are to be seen on the ground, and not flying about in the air.

"I have been here in the zoo quite a while and I get along very well.

"I ate some sand just now, which surprised one of the visitors. But I often eat sand. In fact, I enjoy a certain amount of sand in my food. Just as I have heard some people say that they like to have their food seasoned with salt so does the cassowary like to eat a certain amount of sand.

"Just what that amount is I couldn't tell you. I never measured the amount of sand I ate. But, then, I don't suppose people measure the amount of salt they eat, so that is fair enough.

"My home used to be in an island known as the Cassowary Island. An excellent name it was for the island, too.

"I couldn't point that out to you on the map, but that is where they say I came from, so I suppose they know.

"Anyway, there were lots of cassowaries in the home island, and there is only one other here. That is a young cassowary.

"You'll see him down yonder. He is only eighteen months old. He wasn't born here, but was brought here as a young cassowary child.

"Cassowaries aren't born in the zoo. It is enough of an honor to a zoo that they will be brought here and will lend interest to the zoo by their presence.

"A bit conceited, eh? Well, now and again I feel a little superior and a little like showing that I'm not going to be taken advantage of—I'm not.

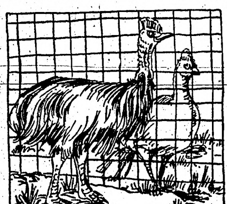
"My home was in a great, thick jungle. Doesn't that sound interesting? There we lived in the wonderful underbrush.

"You will notice that I have a horny, hard kind of a helmet upon my head?

"It protects our heads from injury or harm, as we go through the underbrush.

"Our helmets never grow out of fashion. We're not like people in that way who're always changing hats with the styles.

"And people's hats look shabby after a bit or faded by the sun. But not our helmets. Oh, no, we have helmets worth having.



"Neighbor Curassow Is Much Smaller."

"But, of course, the great advantage about them is that they're of so much protection to us.

"We like lettuce and bread and fruit and bananas in the way of food.

"We do not care for meat.

"Now, sometimes Neighbor Curassow will eat a little meat. But we never will.

"Neighbor Curassow is much smaller than I am. Do you like his red beak?

"Of course one can't expect so much of a smaller creature, and so, you see, he hasn't the sense to keep to a little fruit and vegetable diet as I do.

"But, then, people eat meat, don't they. Well, I must be careful what I say, then, about meat eating.

"The young curassow, over there, a real little zoo curassow, is wilder than those who were brought here from their own curassow home.

"The ones who were brought here are really quite tame.

"Still, the little wild one is whistling now. Do you hear him? A nice whistle he has, hasn't he?

"But I mustn't tell you any more about myself and neighbors, for you might forget if I told you too much.

"Come again and call for me, and my keeper will translate my story into your language with an account of what I do and what I eat and how my disposition has been of late, and all of such interesting matters.

"Good-by. The cassowary politely says good-by and is sorry you won't join him in a little afternoon meal of sand!"

Some More Truths.

WOULD you use a steam shovel to move a pebble? Certainly not. Implements are built according to the work they have to do.

Would you use a grown-up's remedy for your baby's ills? Certainly not. Remedies are prepared according to the work THEY have to do.

All this is preliminary to reminding you that Fletcher's Castoria was sought out, found and is prepared solely as a remedy for Infants and Children. And let this be a warning against Substitutes, Counterfeits and the Just-as-good stuff that may be all right for you in all your strength, but dangerous for the little babe.

All the mother-love that lies within your heart cries out to you: Be true to Baby. And being true to Baby you will keep in the house remedies specially prepared for babies as you would a baby's food, hairbrush, toothbrush or sponge.

Children Cry For Fletcher's CASTORIA

Are You Prepared?

A doctor in the house all the time would be a good idea. Yet you can't afford to keep a doctor in the family to keep baby well or prevent sickness. But you can do almost the same thing by having at hand a bottle of Fletcher's Castoria, because it is a wonderful remedy for indigestion, colic, feverishness, fretfulness and all the other disorders that result from common ailments that babies have.

Fletcher's Castoria is perfectly safe to use. It is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. Children cry for Fletcher's Castoria, and mothers recommend it because they have found it a comfort to children and a mother's friend.

If you love your baby, you know how sweet it is to be able to help baby when trouble comes. You cannot always call upon a doctor. But doctors have nothing but good to say of Fletcher's Castoria, because they know that it can only do good—that it can't do any harm—and they wouldn't want you to use for baby a remedy that you would use for yourself.

How a Wise Farmer Saves His Machinery

Here it is—a good, up-to-date machine shed on an Iowa farm. It's evident this farmer realizes that rust destroys machinery exposed to the weather. Machines well cared for and kept in a shed when not in use, will last much longer than when left in the open.

We have sold a great deal of material for building machine sheds and other farm buildings. Naturally, we have learned some things that may be profitable for you to know. You are very welcome to this information. This is just a part of our helpful, free service to customers. Come in and let us help you save your machinery from rust.

The Holt Weekly News
By The
Holt Publishing Company

Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

Subscription Price: $1.50 per year

All copy for news items, correspondence and advertising should reach this office not later than Tuesday, and sooner if possible

Miss Amanda Mickelson has been assisting Mr. Bratrud at the bank this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Hawkinson of Fertile came Tuesday to visit Mr. and Mrs. Paul Olson.

Miss Betty Johnson commenced teaching the Hagen school Monday in District No. 30.

Mr. Bjerk went to Bemidji last week Thursday to visit at the home of his brother.

Miss Johanna Larson who is teaching near Strathcona spent Saturday and Sunday with home folks.

R. M. Stanton, well known Thief River Falls attorney, died suddenly on Tuesday from an attack of heart disease.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson and baby attended a family reunion at the home of his parents in Thief River Falls, Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gunheim and children went to Grafton, N. Dak., for a short visit with her brother, John Lein, Saturday.

Mr. Elsonpeter, Mrs. Olaf Ramstad and daughter, Mrs. Ila Reynolds and little daughter, Marion all of Thief River Falls, and Mrs. Ramstad's other daugter, Mrs. Oscar Sponheim and son Harold of Long Beach, Cal., all visited Tuesday at the B. Docken home.

This week we publish the two proposed amendments to the state constitution. It looks to us as tho' every voter in the country districts should vote "Yes" for both of them.

Mrs. Richard Kautz of Sarles, N. Dak., came Tuesday to visit her mother until to-day when she expects to go to McIntosh to visit at the homes of her brother and sister.

The Mickelson family moved into their hotel Saturday night and the Johnson family moved into the Engstrom house.

The new bank is having its articles of incorporation published this weekwhich looks as tho' they mean business. We understand they expect to be here about the middle of the month to get ready for business.

The eleven year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Sorum broke her left arm below the elbow, while playing on the school grounds, on Monday afternoon. She fell only 3 or 4 feet from one of the playground poles, but in such a way as to cause the break. The little girl was immediately taken to Dr. Spinks, who set the bones and bound up her arm, and she was getting along nicely at last reports.

Hans Ness has rented the Silbaugh farm formerly occupied by Tony Peterson. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson moved last week to C. H. Gunheim's farm and Mr. Peterson will work for Mr. Gunheim.

The Lawrence Peterson family have moved back to St. Hilaire.

Mrs. Swan and Mrs. Sanoden were T. R. Falls visitors last week Thursday.

Leo Hoglen moved to town Saturday and Mr. Ellis is moving onto the Bjerk farm.

Mrs. Harry Frost and Miss Marie Nelson both of Hallock, visited Mrs. Docken Wednesday.

Knud Wefald and A. E. Bowen will speak in Middle River at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon Oct. 13th.

Mrs. Erik Johnson will entertain the Ringbo Ladies Aid Sunday Oct. 8th at 2 o'clock P. M. Everybody invited.

H. E. Mussey, wife and little granddaughter called on ye editor and wife Saturday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Mussey are publishers of The Grygla Eagle and are always boosting for that country.

C. L. Heinze has sold the west 100 acres of his farm, where the buildings are, to parties from southern Illinois who will move here next March to take possession. The same party also bot Mrs. Sven Johnson's quarter just across the road. The deal was made thru John Bratrud.

Peter E. Kvikstad, whose announcement for clerk of district court, appears in our columns this week, came over from the old country when a young boy. He worked on a farm during the summer and attended college in the winter time for three years. He then commenced bookkeeping in a department store at Argyle and has held that position for 23 years, so he is pretty well acquainted with office work.

His opponents announcement also appears this week along with several of the other old officers who are too well known to need an introduction,

P. B. Malberg for Co. Auditor

Having received the nomination for the office of County Auditor of Marshall County, and having very little time to personally visit the voters, I have to depend upon my old and new friends for their support and votes at the coming general election Nov. 7th, 1922.

Whatever you can and will do for me will be appreciated, and if you vote for and elect me, I shall do my very best to look after yours and the taxpayers interests carefully, efficiently and cheerfully, to the best of my ability.

Sincerely yours,
P. B. Malberg.

Political Advertising ordered inserted by Peter E. Kvikstad and to be paid for by him at regular rates.

To The Voters of Marshal County:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of Clerk of District Court of Marshall County.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on Election Day, November 7, 1922.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me; and if you elect me I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of Clerk of Court carefully and impartially to all.

Respectfully yours,
Peter E. Kvikstad.

To The Voters Of Marshall Co., Minn.

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election to the office of Register of Deeds.

If re-elected, I shall continue to devote my entire time to the prompt and effecient performance of the duties of the office.

Thanking you for the support received in the past, and respectfully soliciting your support and vote on election day, November 7th. I am,

Respectfully yours,
Chas. E. Grinder.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

In announcing my candidacy for re-election to the office of Clerk of the District Court of Marshall County, I pledge courteous treatment, efficient, prompt and personal service, as I have tried to render during my incumbency in office, and I assure you that your vote and support is appreciated and will not be forgotten after election.

Sincerely yours,
Alfred C. Swandby.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

I wish to state at the beginning of this campaign that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the county in making me one of their nominees for the very important office of County Auditor. During my administration of the County Auditor's office, I have endeavored to discharge the manifold duties of the office in a careful, prompt and efficient manner, to keep the books of the county neatly and correctly and in accordance with the law, and have always in my conduct of the office had the best interests of the tax payers in view. If favored with a re-election it shall be my highest purpose to serve the people to the very best of my ability in the future as in the past.

Respectfully,
A. G. Lundgren.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this House set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

You Can Get Back Your Grip on Health

Persons suffering from stomach trouble and who are under weight find an ever-ready friend in Tanlac. This celebrated medicine has ended indigestion and increased the weight for thousands of people everywhere. Mrs. O. D. Flaherty, 1905 Grace St., Lynchburg, Va., says:

"My son's health was fully restored by Tanlac and he actually gained twenty pounds in weight. After every meal he suffered terribly from severe pains, palpitation and shortness of breath, and had awful headaches. He was terribly nervous, too. He is working now every day and is in as good health as he ever was."

Under nourishment is the cause of most cases of under weight. Tanlac enables the stomach to extract the healthy nutriment from the food, builds up the whole body and increases the weight to normal. Millions of people have testified to its great benefits. Get a bottle today at any good druggist.—Advertisement.

Up to the Doctor.

Mrs. Potts' husband had been quite ill, but finally there came a change. When the doctor called and had a look at his patient he announced:

"He is a convalescent."

Whereupon Mrs. Potts regarded the physician suspiciously; and her suspicion increased when he made no further comment but prepared to go.

"Well, you'se a doctor, ain't yo," she demanded. "Ain't yo' got no med'cine fo' dis heah convalescence?"—Exchange.

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can dye or tint faded, shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, sweaters, stockings, hangings, draperies, everything like new. Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed, even if you have never dyed before. Tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade, or run. So easy to use.—Advertisement.

One Ray of Joy.

"And what kind of a filling do you want, my little man?" asked a kindly dentist of a small boy who had been suffering a dozen martyrdoms in the chair.

It was the first cheerful word the boy had heard for an hour.

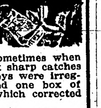
Is Backache Crippling You?

Is that dull, nagging backache making it hard for you to get around? Are you lame, sore and tortured with sharp, rheumatic pains? It's time, then, you gave some attention to your kidneys! A persistent backache is often Nature's first signal of kidney weakness. You may have headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities, too. Kidney troubles, if treated early, are usually easily corrected. Begin now with Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

A Minnesota Case



Every Picture Tells a Story

Albert Ericksen, painter, 408 2nd Ave., N., Chrisholm, Minn., says: "My back gave me trouble and my kidneys were not in good condition. When I bent over it was impossible for me to straighten again. Mornings my back was stiff and lame. Sometimes when I turned suddenly I got sharp catches in my back. My kidneys were irregular in action. I used one box of Doan's Kidney Pills, which corrected the trouble."

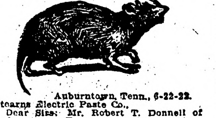
A TRUE RAT STORY



Auburntown, Tenn., 6-22-22.

Stearns Electric Paste Co.,

Dear Sirs: Mr. Robert T. Donnell of Auburntown, Tenn., came in our store the other day and wanted something to kill rats, so I sold him a box Stearns Rat Paste. And he put some paste on six biscuits that night and the next morning he found fifty-four big rats. And the second night he put out four more biscuits with paste on them, and the second morning he found seventeen more rats, making a total of seventy-one rats in two nights, and there were lots more that he did not find.

This is some big rat tale, but nevertheless, it is so. Just thought would write to let you know that your rat paste is good.

Respectfully, KENNEDY BROTHERS.

—20—

Chacherre's Bundle.

It was seven in the morning when Henry Gramont drove his car into Houma.

In the wire which he had sent over Chacherre's signature he had commanded Dick Hearne to meet Gramont at about this time at a restaurant near the court house. Putting his car at the curb, Gramont went into the restaurant and ordered a hasty breakfast. He had brought with him copies of the morning papers, and was perusing the accounts of Bob Maillard's pitifully weak story regarding his father's murder, when a stranger stopped beside him.

"Gramont?" said the other. "Thought it was you. Hearne's my name—I had orders to meet you. What's up?"

The other man dropped into the chair opposite Gramont, who put away his papers. Hearne was a sleek individual of pasty complexion who evidently served the gang in no better light than as a go-between and runner of errands. That he suspected nothing was plain from his casual manner, although he had never seen Gramont previously.

"Business," said Gramont, leaning back to let the waitress serve his breakfast. When she had departed, he attacked it hungrily. "You got Chacherre's wire about the stuff in his car?" Was it burned?"

"No. He countermanded it just as I was hirin' a car to go over to Paradis," said Hearne. "What's stirrin', anyhow?"

"Plenty. Memphis Izzy's coming down today. When'll he get in?"

"He'll go direct to the other place, won't come here. Oh, I reckon he'll get there along about nine this morning. Why?"

"We'll have to go over there to meet him," said Gramont. "I stopped in here to pick you up. Hammond is still safe in jail?"

"Chacherre was pinched last night for the murder," said Gramont, watching the other.

"The h—ll!" Hearne looked astonished, then relaxed and laughed again. "Some fly cop will sure lose his buttons, then! They ain't got nothin' on him."

"I heard they had plenty."

"Don't worry." Hearne waved a hand grandiloquently. "The boss is solid with the bunch up to Baton Rouge, and they'll take care of everybody. So old Ben got pinched, huh? That's one joke, man!"

Gramont's worst suspicions were confirmed by the attitude of Hearne, who plainly considered that the entire gang had nothing to fear from the law. Chacherre's boasts were backed up solidly. It was obvious to Gramont that the ramifications of the gang extended very high up, indeed.

"Better cut out the talk," he said, curtly, "until we get out of here."

Hearne nodded and rolled a cigarette.

When his hasty meal was finished, Gramont paid at the counter and led the way outside. He motioned toward the car, and Hearne obediently climbed in, being evidently of so little account in the gang that he was accustomed to taking orders from everyone.

Gramont headed out of town and took the Paradis road. Before he had driven a mile, however, he halted the car, climbed out, and lifted one side of the hood.

"Give me those rags from the bottom of the car, Hearne," he said, briefly.

The other obeyed. As Gramont made no move to come and get them, Hearne got out of the car; then Gramont rose from the engine unexpectedly, and Hearne looked into a pistol.

Hearne uttered an oath, but as the pistol jerked at him he obeyed the command. Gramont took the strip of cloth, which he had previously prepared, and bound the man's wrists.

"These are better than handcuffs," he commented. "Too many slick individuals can get rid of bracelets—but you'll have one man's job to get rid of these! Oh! a gun in your pocket, eh? Thanks."

"What t'ell you doin'?" exclaimed the bewildered Hearne.

"Placing you under arrest," said Gramont, cheerfully.

"Here, where's your warrant? You ain't no dick—"

Gramont cut short his protests with a long cloth, which effectually bound his lower jaw in place and precluded any further idea of talk.

He then tied Dick Hearne securely, hand and foot, and then lashed him to one of the top supports of the car. When he had finished, Hearne was reasonably safe. He then climbed under the wheel again and proceeded on his way. Hearne's lashings were inconspicuous to any one whom the car passed.

It was a little after eight in the morning when Gramont drove into Paradis. He noticed that two large automobiles were standing in front of the post office, and that about them were a group of men who eyed him and his car with some interest. Paying no attention to these, he drove on through the town without a halt.

Sweeping out along the north road, he encountered no one. When at length he reached the Ledanois farm he drove in toward the deserted house and parked the car among some trees where it could not be seen from the road.

Leaving the car, Gramont took his way toward the bank of the bayou and followed this in the direction of the adjoining property.

He went on to an opening in the bushes which, over the low rail fence, gave him a clear view of the Gumberts property. There he paused, quickly drew back, and gained a point whence he could see without danger of his presence being discovered. He settled into immobility and watched.

That Memphis Izzy himself had not yet arrived, he was fairly certain. Near the barn were drawn up two flivvers, and sitting in chairs on the cottage veranda were three men who must have come in these cars. Gramont had come provided with binoculars, and got these out. He was not long in discovering that all three men on the veranda were strangers to him. They, no doubt, were men in the lottery game, waiting for Gumberts to arrive. Gramont turned his attention to the other buildings.

Both the barn and shop were open, and the buzzing thrum of machinery bore witness that the mechanics were hard at work upon the stolen cars. Gramont thought of Ben Chacherre, still tied and lashed to the chair in his room, and wondered what was to be found under the rear seat of Ben's car. He could see the car from where he lay.

Almost on his thought, a high-powered and noiseless car came sweeping down the road and he knew at once that Memphis Izzy had arrived. He knew it intuitively, even before he obtained a good glimpse of the broad, heavy figure and the dominating features. Memphis Izzy was far from handsome, but he possessed character.

"Where's the Goog?" As he left the car, which he had driven himself, Gumberts lifted his voice in a bull-like roar that carried clearly to Gramont. "Where's Charlie the Goog?"

The mechanics appeared hurriedly. One of them, no other than Gramont's friend of the adenoidal aspect, who seemed to own the mellifluous title of Charlie the Goog, hastened to the side of Gumberts, and the latter gave him evident directions regarding some repair to the car. Then, turning, Memphis Izzy strode to the cottage. He nodded greetings to the four men who awaited him, took a bunch of keys from his pocket and opened the cottage door. All five vanished within.

Gramont rose. A moment previously, fever had thrilled him; the excitement of the manhunt had held him trembling. Now he was cool again, his fingers touching the pistol in his pocket, his eyes steady. He glanced at his watch and nodded.

"It's time!" he murmured. "Let's hope there'll be no slipup! All ready, Memphis Izzy. So am I. Let's go!"

Unhurried and openly, he advanced, making his leisurely way toward the barn and shop. Charlie the Goog, who was bent over the car of Gumberts, was first to discern his approach, and straightened up. Gramont waved his hand in greeting. Charlie the Goog turned his head and called his brethren, who came into sight, staring at Gramont.

The latter realized that if he passed them the game was won. If they stopped him, he bade fair to lose everything.

"Hello, boys!" he called, cheerily, as he drew near. "I came out on an errand for the boss—got a message for Gumberts. Where is he? In the house?"

The others nodded, plainly mistrusting him, yet puzzled by his careless manner and his reference to Fell.

"Sure," answered Charlie the Goog. "Go right in—he's in the big front room."

"Thanks."

Gramont continued his way, conscious that they were staring after him. If there was anything phony about him, they evidently considered that Memphis Izzy would take care of the matter very ably.

The steps of the cottage porch creaked protestingly as Gramont ascended them. Perhaps Memphis Izzy recognized an unaccustomed footstep; perhaps that conversation outside had penetrated to him. Gramont entered the front door into the hall, and as he did so, Gumberts opened the door on his right and stood gazing at him—rather, glaring.

"Who're you?" he demanded, roughly.

"Came out with a message from Mr. Fell," responded Gramont at once. "Brought some orders, I should say—" The sixth sense of Memphis Izzy, which had carried him uncaught into a grizzled age, must have flashed a warning to his crook's brain. In the man's eyes Gramont read a surge of suspicion and knew that his bluff could be worked no longer.

"Here's his note," he said, and reached into his pocket.

Gumberts' hand flashed down, but halted as Gramont's pistol covered him.

"Back into that room, and do it quickly," said Gramont, stepping forward. "Quick!"

Memphis Izzy obeyed. Gramont stood in the doorway, his eyes sweeping the room and the men inside. Startled, all four of them had risen and were staring at him. In his other hand he produced an automatic which he had taken from Dick Hearne.

"The first word from any of you gentlemen," he declared, "will draw a shot. I'm doing all the talking here. Savvy?"

They stood staring, paralyzed by this apparition. They had been sitting about the table, which was heaped with papers and with packages of money. A large safe in the wall stood open. Beside the table was a small mail sack, partially emptied of its contents; torn envelopes littered the floor.

That this was the headquarters of at least a section of the lottery gang Gramont saw without need of explanation.

"You're under arrest," said Gramont, quietly. "The game's up, Gumberts. Hands up, all of you! Dick Hearne has peached on the whole gang, and from the boss down you're all in for a term in stir. You with the derby! Take Gumberts' gun, and those of your companions, then your own; throw 'em on the floor in the corner, and if you make the wrong kind of a move, heaven help you! Step lively, there!"

Each man there had a revolver or pistol, and one by one the weapons clattered into the corner. Gumberts stood motionless, licking his thick lips, unuttered curses in his glaring eyes. And in that instant Gramont heard the porch steps creak and caught a low, startled cry.

"Hey, boss! They's a gang comin' on the run—"

It was Charlie the Goog, bursting in upon them in wild haste. Gramont stepped into the room and turned slightly, covering with one of his weapons the intruder, who stood aghast in the doorway as he comprehended the scene.

No words passed. Staring at the five men, then at Gramont, the adenoidal mechanic gulped once—and like a flash acted. He ducked low and fired from his pocket. Gramont fired at the same instant, and the heavy bullet, catching Charlie the Goog squarely in the chest, hurled his body half across the room.

With the shots Memphis Izzy flung himself forward in a headlong rush. That desperate shot of the little mechanic had broken Gramont's right arm above the wrist; before he could fire a second time, with the weapon in his left hand, Gumberts had wrested the pistol aside and was struggling with him. The other four came into the melee full weight.

Gramont went down under a crashing blow. Over him leaped Memphis Izzy and rushed into the doorway—then stopped with astounding abruptness and lifted his arms. After him the other four followed suit. Two men, panting a little, stood outside the door and covered them with shotguns.

"Tie 'em, boys," said Gramont, rising dizzily to his feet. "No, I'm not hurt—my arm's broken, I think, but let that wait. Got the ones outside?"

A stamping of feet filled the hall, and other men appeared there.

"Got two of 'em, Gramont!" responded the leader. "The third slipped in here—ah, there he is!"

Poor Charlie the Goog lay dead on the floor—a touch of heroic tragedy in his last desperate action; the one great action of his life, possibly. He had realized that it meant doom, yet he had done what he could.

"I think that's all," said Gramont. "We've sure made a killing, boys—and it's a good thing you jumped in to the minute! A second later and they'd have done for me. Take care of that evidence, will you? Get that mail sack and the letters particularly; if they've been working their lottery outside the state, it'll be a federal matter."

"Who are you guys? You can't do this without authority—"

"Don't be silly, Memphis Izzy," said Gramont, smiling a little, then twitching to the pain of his arm. "These friends of mine are members with me of the American Legion, and they've come along at my request to put you crooks where you belong. As for authority, you can ask and go hang.

"Here, boys, I've got to get out to that barn. Come along, some of you!"

He led the way out to the barn and, the others trooping in behind him, entered. He pointed out the car which had brought Chacherre here previously, and ordered the extra seat in the back opened up.

"I think there's a bundle inside," he said. "What's in it, I don't know—"

"Here we are, cap."

A bundle was produced, and opened. In it was found the aviator's costume which Gramont had worn as the Midnight Masquer, and which Chacherre had stolen with the loot. Wrapped among the leather garments was an automatic pistol.

Gramont stood aghast before this discovery, as realization of what it meant broke full upon him.

"Good lord!" he exclaimed, amazedly. "Boys—why, it must have been Ben Chacherre who killed Maillard! See if that pistol has been used—"

The Midnight Masquer had fired two bullets into Maillard. Two cartridges were gone from this automatic.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

In the Hands of Friends.

"When you leave yourself in the hands of your friends are you sure you can trust them?"

"No," replied Senator Sorghum. "Some of them are liable at any moment to go out behind my back and dig up all kinds of needful campaign funds in a manner that I should highly disapprove of if I knew about it."

A UNION OF INTEREST TO WOMEN

Healthy Housewife---Happy Home

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Has Helped Form Many

For the ailing, half-sick housewife such a union is impossible. Often times even the slightest form of housework cannot be accomplished. Yet the work must be done.

Many women struggle along for years suffering from some form of female trouble that make their lives miserable and their homes far from happy.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped thousands of just such women regain their health and strength. Just give your thought to the following letters and remember that the women who wrote these letters knew how they felt before taking the Vegetable Compound and again afterwards. It helped them—let it help you.

Had Nervous Spells

Horatio, Ark.—"I had nervous spells and awful bad feelings. My right side and my back hurt me all the time and I had been going down in health for six or seven years. For three years I had not been able to do my work without help. I weighed only 95 pounds when my husband's mother persuaded me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Now I heartily recommend it to all suffering women, as I have gained weight and health. I can do all my work, anything I want to do."—Mrs. JIM REARICK, Horatio, Arkansas.

Reading, Pa.—"I was a nervous wreck and could hardly do my housework. I always had to have help or I would never have got it done. Through the advice of friends I have been taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my nerves and Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine for my blood and I am feeling fine and doing my work all alone. I can recommend these medicines to any one, for they certainly helped me. I suffered for five years and Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines pulled me through."—Mrs. WALTER U. STOYER, 1218 Mulberry St., Reading, Pa.

Recommends the Vegetable Compound

New Orleans, La.—"I have found relief from my troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I praise it wherever I go. I could not do my work as it should be done for I would sometimes have to lie down because of the pains I had. A friend induced me to take your Vegetable Compound and I have got great results from it. I keep house and am able to do all my own work. I recommend your Vegetable Compound to my friends who have troubles similar to mine."—Mrs. T. FOECKLER, 1915 N. Derbigny St., New Orleans, La.

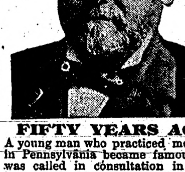
Why does money usually get rattled when it converses?



FIFTY YEARS AGO

A young man who practiced medicine in Pennsylvania became famous and was called in consultation in many towns and cities because of his success in the treatment of disease. This was Dr. Pierce, who finally made up his mind to place some of his medicines before the public, and moving to Buffalo, N. Y., put up what he called his "Favorite Prescription," and placed it with the druggists in every state.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has long been recognized as a tonic for diseases peculiar to womankind. After suffering pain, feeling nervous, dizzy, weak and dragged-down by weaknesses of her sex—a woman is quickly restored to health by its use. Thousands of women testify that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Perscription has entirely eradicated their distressing ailments.

More recently that wonderful discovery of Dr. Pierce's, called An-uric (for kidneys and backache), has been successfully used by many thousands who write Dr. Pierce of the benefits received—that their backache, rheumatism, and other symptoms of uric acid deposits in joints or muscles have been completely conquered by its use.

HANDKIES ADD TO COSTUME

Accessory Serves to Break Dullness of Outfit Otherwise Classed as Plain.

Handkerchiefs cannot really be considered as actual dress accessories and yet there are times when a harmless little handkerchief does all manner of telling things to a costume that might otherwise be classed as dull. For instance, a dark brown suit can be given a dash by the effect of a little bright yellow handkerchief peeping from the pocket.

In the old days we used to think that colored handkerchiefs were just a bit vulgar, but along with our change of ideals in many directions has come a turn-over in this fashion. Now the little handmade, brilliantly colored bits of linen are about the smartest touches we can hope to have. That being the case, there immediately presents itself before our eyes an array too tempting for words. They are raspberry tinted and blue in many lovely shades, they are green and even purple. Some of them are made up of combinations of colors looking most bizarre. The favorite gift these days consists of a collection of a dozen handkerchiefs, or a half dozen, maybe, each in a different tint or with a different colored border.

If You Wear Earrings.

Earrings affect the eyes' appearance. If these ornaments gleam and sparkle and eyes are inclined to be dull, the dullness is increased. If eyes are light blue, blue earrings of a deeper shade should not be worn. A long, thin face should not be framed by long earrings, which will only accentuate the length from forehead to chin. The same idea applies to a round face, which can stand dangling stones as they take away from the apparent width.

Ivory Jewelry.

Ivory jewelry is the latest. Beautiful bead necklaces have evenly graduated beads of wonderful smoothness. Then there are hand-carved ivory pendants of many designs and exquisite workmanship. The necklaces come 24 to 34 inches long.

YOU MAY NOT BELIEVE THIS

But, if True, This Young Lady Is Very Evidently Not in the Class of Modern "Flappers."

A country correspondent of an Indiana weekly newspaper, who disclaimed being either a pessimist or reformer, recently wrote as follows: "The other day a man and his daughter from near Danville, Ky., passed through our town on their way to a nearby village. They expected to be met at the train by a relative, but he was late, so they had to wait for him for four or five hours. The daughter was a young woman of seventeen, but still wore her hair in curls. We were especially impressed by the natural girlishness and sweet modesty of the young woman. She was refined, too, both in manners and dress. Her father apologized for her bashfulness. There's nothing else to say about this little incident except that it is a rare and beautiful thing to hear a father apologize for the modesty of a daughter of seventeen summers."—Indianapolis News.

HAD REAL CAUSE FOR GRIEF

Small Boy's Distress Had a Whole Lot More Than Mere Sympathy as a Basis.

A lad in Washington got a job that didn't at all please him—shoveling the snow from the sidewalk in front of his house. There was a good bit of ground to cover. After about two hours' toil he began to cry.

"What's the matter, son?" asked a sympathetic neighbor, as he came upon the scene.

"A tramp came along and stole the shovel from the boy next door," explained the lad between sobs.

"Well, son," continued the neighbor, "it's a fine thing to be sympathetic, but you mustn't worry so over other people's affairs."

"It ain't that," added the boy, "I am crying because he didn't steal my shovel, too."—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Spoiled Diamonds.

Among the crown jewels of the Hapsburgs were two large diamonds of ruby tint which were always regarded as especially valuable and whenever the royal jewels were placed on exhibition these stones were under special guard. It was necessary some time ago to dispose of the jewels, and as they were being prepared for exhibition, prior to being offered for sale, they were put through a wash which unfortunately removed the color of the precious stones and left them perfectly white. Instead of demanding a fabulous price as ruby diamonds, they were sold simply as white stones.—Chicago Journal.

His Natural Inquiry.

"Land of Goshen, Runt!" ejaculated Mrs. Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "You're a sight on earth! Go clean yourself up right now. Take plenty of soft soap, and wash your face and hands and arms and neck and ears."

"Heck, Maw! What's coming off?" cried the child in amazement. "Is it my birthday?"—Kansas City Star.

Always in Style.

They were going through the furniture factory, and Mrs. Smith was amazed at the great proportion of chairs.

"Well, ma'am," responded the ingenious attendant, "you see, it's the dull season, and most of our furniture is out of style, but settin' never really goes out of fashion."

Paradoxical but True.

"The human anatomy is a wonderful bit of mechanism," observed an apprentice. "Yes," agreed the foreman, "I patted Charles on the back and made his head swell."

PRAYER CAME FROM HEART

Under the Circumstances, There Can Be Little Doubt Sambo Was Sincere in His Supplication.

Representative Christopherson of South Dakota tells a good story about a darky who was short of meat at home and selected his pastor's smokehouse as a likely place to get a nice ham. As he was leaving with a big one under his arm the pastor suddenly appeared before him and said:

"Why, Sambo, what are you doing in my smokehouse at this time of night?"

To which the trembling darky replied: "Ah suh, Ah just come in to pray, suh."

Whereupon the pastor said: "If that is the purpose of this visit here, then you just get down and pray."

Thereupon the darky sank on his knees, raised his eyes and hands to heaven and offered up this prayer: "Oh, Lord, I pray that you now promptly dismiss us so that we may depart in peace."—Exchange.

Misused Figure of Speech.

"He called his son a spendthrift, and did not fail, as he had done before, to cast his recently purchased motorcar, a 160-horsepower touring machine, in his teeth."—Exchange.

Surprised.

"Heavens!" said the visiting golfer, "I never played such a rotten game!" "Oh! Then you have played before?" asked the brave caddy.—Judge.

Descendants of Mary's Lamb.

Col. Thomas Powell of Columbus, Ohio, veteran of the Civil war and brother of the famous Gen. Eugene Powell, is the proud owner of "Lawnmower," the only living descendant of Mary's little lamb. The original Mary was Mary Sawyer of Sterling, Mass., who was eight years old at the time celebrated by the poem in 1814. The immortal verses, by the way, were written by John Roulston.—From the Argonaut.

Threat Considered a Favor.

Jodkins was always a dissatisfied member of the staff. His complaint this time he considered a big one and he told his work mates that he would threaten to leave.

"What did the boss say about your threat to leave?" he was asked on being seen coming from the chief's room.

"He didn't take it as a threat," replied Jodkins, "he thought I was doing the firm a favor."—London Tit-Bits.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by

CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to

MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

"Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned; fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law make the necessary provisions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate, based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of the amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business; and to require that the proceeds of such taxes shall be distributed in the manner following, to-wit: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund, and ten per cent to the permanent university fund.

Yours respectfully,
CLIFFORD L. HILTON,
Attorney General.

J. M. Swan and Chris Norbeck returned Tuesday from the cities where they had been with a couple of cars of cattle.

Loyd Knutson returned home Friday from Adams, N. Dak., accompanied by his cousin, Herbert Gilbertson, who will visit here.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson went to Thief River Falls last Thursday night to meet her mother, Mrs. Hobbs of Park River, N. Dak.

Hon. Halvor Steenerson will speak at the Woodman Hall in Holt on Saturday afternoon Oct. 14th, at 2 o'clock. Everybody invited.

George A. Selke, state graded school inspector, and county superintendent Johnson visited the Holt public schools Tuesday morning.

Misses Inga Johnson and Clara Garthus returned home Thursday of last week from Thief River Falls where they had been working at Mr. Fodstad's.

E. A. Johnson sends greetings to all his old friends. He expected to leave Sweden this week and to be in Holt sometime next month.

Mrs. A. C. Jahr and daughter Lillian visited relatives and friends a few days this week returning to Thief River Falls Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Anderson and baby, her mother, Mrs. Hobbs, J. A. Sorum and Erik Johnson left Friday for the cities to attend the National Dairy Show.

The Nazareth Ladies Aid will meet in the church basement Thursday Oct. 19th. Mrs. Marcus Udstrand and Mrs. Nels Nelson will entertain. Everybody invited.

Mrs. R. L. Adams and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren went to Roseau Friday to have the cast removed from the latters knee and ankle. When this was done, it was found that one of the bones of the ankle was out of place and it had to be reset. Mr. Holmgren was notified and he went up there Saturday night and staid Sunday with his wife and had her sent home on Monday. Mrs. Holmgren is resting as easy as could be expected but the resetting of the bone will keep her confined to her bed for a few weeks more.

Mrs. Riesberg went to Argyle Wednesday to visit relatives.

We make and give away candidates pictures at this office.

Sam Reierson went to Argyle Wednesday where he has a job of hauling grain.

The creamery was broken into last Thursday night and robbed of about $11.00 in cash.

Axel Nelson and Ludwig Larson went to Emerson, N. Dak., Friday to help with threshing.

T. Severson returned home Sunday from Dakota where he had been running a threshing rig.

Misses Agot and Martha Nygaard returned home Tuesday from Climax where they had been working.

Arnold Boernstein came Tuesday night from Dakota where he had been working with a threshing crew.

Carl Sorenson returned Saturday night from Dakota where he had been running a threshing engine for several weeks.

Carl, Louis and Melvin Hanson returned home last week Thursday from east of Thief River Falls where they had been picking potatoes.

Thorval Kolden, Oscar Haggland, Selmer and Lawerence Reierson, Engval Johnson and Ole Tveit returned home Tuesday from Argyle.

Everyone should be willing to hear both sides of all issues. Halvor Steenerson wants to tell you his side of the story Saturday P. M.

Renie Werner showed us a couple of ears of corn this week that were 8 and 9 inches long, with 16 rows of kernels, all of them well filled. He has eleven acres of this corn and he thinks it will yield fully sixty bushels or better to the acre. The corn is of the Northwestern Dent variety. It was planted the second week in June and he cultivated the field about ten times and it surely paid well for all the work.

A reduction of over $2,500,000.00 in the 1923 state tax is announced by state auditor Chase. The state rate has been set at 4.18 mills, which is less than last year's low mark and little more than half the 1919 tax. The general revenue tax is omitted again this year for the second time in the history of the state.

The car shortage thruout the northwest is tieing up shipments of stock, grain and potatoes and is causing losses every day.

Locally the situation is no better. The farmers elevator is just about full, flour house and all. There is not much chance of improvement in the situation for a few weeks.

Notice for Ditch Repairs

To The Voters of Marshal County:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of Clerk of District Court of Marshall County.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on Election Day, November 7, 1922.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me; and if you elect me I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of Clerk of Court carefully and impartially to all.

Respectfully yours,

To The Voters Of Marshal County:

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election to the office of Register of Deeds.

If re-elected, I shall continue to devote my entire time to the prompt and effecient performance of the duties of the office.

Thanking you for the support received in the past, and respectfully soliciting your support and vote on election day, November 7th. I am,

Respectfully yours,
Chas. E. Grinder.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

In announcing my candidacy for re-election to the office of Clerk of the District Court of Marshall County, I pledge courteous treatment, efficient, prompt and personal service, as I have tried to render during my incumbency in office, and I assure you that your vote and support is appreciated and will not be forgotten after election.

Sincerely yours,
Alfred C. Swandby.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

I wish to state at the beginning of this campaign that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the county in making me one of their nominees for the very important office of County Auditor. During my administration of the County Auditor's office, I have endeavored to discharge the manifold duties of the office in a careful, prompt and efficient manner, to keep the books of the county neatly and correctly and in accordance with the law, and have always in my conduct of the office had the best interests of the tax payers in view. If favored with a re-election it shall be my highest purpose to serve the people to the very best of my ability in the future as in the past.

Respectfully,
A. G. Lundgren.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

A FRIEND IN NEED A FRIEND INDEED

Writes Mrs. Hardee Regarding Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Los Angeles, Calif.—"I must tell you that I am a true friend to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I have taken it off and on for twenty years and it has helped me change from a delicate girl to a stout, healthy woman. When I was married I was sick all the time until I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was in bed much of my time with pains and had to have the doctor every month. One day I found a little book in my yard in Guthrie, Oklahoma, and I read it through and got the medicine—Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound—and took eight bottles and used the Sanative Wash. I at once began to get stronger. I have got many women to take it just by telling them what it has done for me. I have a young sister whom it has helped in the same way it helped me. I want you to know that I am a 'friend indeed,' for you were a 'friend in need.'" —Mrs. GEORGE HARDEE, 1043 Byram St., Los Angeles, California

When the Heavens Fall.

The chief of police entered the office of Jachin Fell, high in the Maison Blanche building, at eight o'clock on Friday evening. Mr. Fell glanced up at him in surprise.

"Hello, chief! What's up?"

The officer gazed at him in astonishment.

"What's up? Why, I came around to see you, of course!"

Jachin Fell smiled whimsically. "To see me? Well, chief, that's good of you; sit down and have a cigar, eh? What's the matter? You look rather taken aback."

"I am," said the other, bluntly. "Didn't you expect me?"

"No," said Jachin Fell, halting suddenly in the act of reaching for a cigar, and turning his keen gaze upon the chief. "Expect you? No!"

"It's darned queer, then! That chap Gramont called me up about ten minutes ago and said to get around here as quick as I could make it, that you wanted to see me."

"Gramont!" Jachin Fell frowned. "Where's Ben Chacherre? Haven't you found him yet?"

"Nary a sign of him, chief."

"Good evening, gentlemen!" he said, smiling.

"Here's Gramont, now!" exclaimed Fell. "Did you call the chief over here—"

"I sure did," and Gramont came forward. "I wanted to see you two gentlemen together, and so arranged it. Miss Ledanois is to be here at nine, Fell?"

The little man nodded, his eyes intent upon Gramont. He noticed the bandaged arm.

"Yes. Have you been hurt?"

"Slightly." Gramont brought up a chair across the desk from Fell, and sat down. He put his left hand in his pocket and brought forth a document which he handed to the chief of police. "Cast your eye over that, chief, and say nothing. You're here to listen for the present. Here's something to cover your case. Mr. Fell."

Gramont produced his automatic from the pocket of his coat, and laid it on the desk before him. There was a moment of startled silence. The officer, looking over the paper which Gramont had handed him, seemed to find it of sudden, intense interest.

"What means all this mystery and melodramatic action, Gramont?" demanded Jachin Fell, a slight sneer in his eyes, his voice quite toneless.

"It means," said Gramont, regarding him steadily, "that you're under arrest. I went out to the Gumberts place on Bayou Terrebonne this morning, arrested Memphis Izzy Gumberts and four other men engaged in operating a lottery, and also arrested two mechanicians who were engaged in working on stolen cars. We took in, further, a gentleman by the name of Dick Hearne; a lesser member of the gang, who is now engaged in dictating a confession. Just a moment, chief! I prefer to do the talking at present."

Gramont smiled into the steady, unfaltering eyes of Fell.

"You are next on the program," he said, evenly. "We know that you are at the head of an organized gang, which is not only operating a lottery through this and adjacent states, but also is conducting an immense business in stolen automobiles. Therefore—"

"Just one minute, please," said Jachin Fell. "Do you forget, Mr. Gramont, the affair of the Midnight Masquer? You are a very zealous citizen, I have no doubt, but—"

"I was about to add," struck in Gramont, "that your pleasant friend Ben Chacherre is charged with the murder of the sheriff of Terrebonne parish, in which I have clear evidence against him, having been present at the scene of the crime. He is also charged with the murder of Joseph Maillard—"

"My heavens!" said Fell, staring. "I never dreamed that Chacherre—"

"Perhaps you didn't." Gramont shrugged his shoulders. "Neither did anyone else. I imagine that Ben learned of this room and drinking party, and rightly decided that he could make a rich haul off a small crowd of drunken young sports. He had the costume stolen from my car, as you know; also the automatic which went with it. Two shots were missing from the automatic when we found it in Ben's possession; and you remember the Masquer fired twice at the time Maillard was killed."

Fell's keen eyes sparkled angrily.

"You're a very zealous citizen, young man," he said, softly. "I see that you've been hurt. I trust your little game did not result in casualties?"

Gramont nodded. "Charlie the Goog went west. He was desperate, I fancy; at all events he got me in the arm, and I had to shoot him. Memphis Izzy hardly justified his tremendous reputation, for he yielded like a lamb."

"So you killed the Goog, eh?" said Fell. "Very zealous, Mr. Gramont! And I suppose that the exigencies of the case justified you, a private citizen, in carrying arms and using them? Who aided you in this marvelous affair?"

"A number of friends from my post of the American Legion," said Gramont, evenly.

"Ah! This organization is going in for politics, then?"

"Not for politics, Fell; for justice. I deputized them to assist me."

"Deputized!" repeated Fell, slowly.

"Certainly." Gramont smiled. "You see, this lottery business has been going on for a year or more. Some time ago, before I came to New Orleans, the governor of this state appointed me a special officer to investigate the matter. There is my commission, which the chief has been reading. It gives me a good deal of power, Fell; quite enough power to gather in you and your bunch."

The chief of police looked very uneasily from Gramont to Jachin Fell, and back again. Fell sat erect in his chair, staring at Gramont.

"You were the original Midnight Masquer," said Fell in his toneless voice. At this direct charge, and at Gramont's assent, the chief started in surprise.

"Yes. One reason was that I suspected some one in society, some one high up in New Orleans, to be connected with the gang; but I never dreamed that you were the man, Fell. I rather suspected young Maillard. I am now glad to say that I was entirely wrong. You were the big boss, Fell, and you're going to serve time for it."

Fell glanced at the chief, who cleared his throat as if about to speak. At this moment, however, a sharp knock sounded at the door.

"Come!" called Gramont.

A man entered. It was one of Gramont's deputies, who happened also to be a reporter from one of the morning papers of the city. He carried several sheets of paper which he laid before Gramont. He glanced at Fell, who recognized him and exchanged a nod of greeting, then returned his attention to Gramont.

"Ah!" said the latter with satisfaction, as he examined the papers. "So Hearne has given up everything, has he? Does this confession implicate Mr. Fell, here?"

"Well, rather," drawled the other, cheerfully. "And see here, cap! There are two more of us in the crowd and we've arranged to split the story. We'd like to rush the stuff to our papers the minute you give the word, because—"

"I know." Gramont returned the papers that bore the confession of Hearne. "You've made copies of this, of course? All right. Shoot the stuff in to your papers right away, if you wish."

Fell raised a hand to check the other.

"One moment, please!" he said, his eyes boring into the newspaper man. "Will you also take a message from me to the editor of your newspaper—and see that it goes to the others as well?"

"If Mr. Gramont permits, yes."

"Go ahead," said Gramont, wondering what Fell would try now. He soon learned.

"Then," pursued Fell, evenly, "you will kindly inform the editors of your papers that, in case my name appears in connection with this matter, I shall immediately institute suit for libel. No matter what Mr. Gramont may say or do, I assure you fully that no publicity is going to attach to me in this matter. Neither, I may add, am I going to be arrested. That is all, sir."

Gramont smiled. "Take the message if you see fit, by all means," he said, carelessly. "You may also take my fullest assurance that within twenty minutes you will observe Mr. Fell safely in jail. That's all."

The newspaper man saluted and departed, grinning.

"So you won't be arrested, eh? Let's see. I know that this gang of yours has influence running up into high places, and that this influence has power. That is why I was appointed to investigate this lottery game secretly, and in my own way. That is why, also, I brought the chief of police here tonight."

He turned to the perturbed officer, and spoke coldly.

"Now, chief, you've seen my authority, you've heard my charges, and you know they will be proved up to the hilt. Are you willing to arrest Jachin Fell, or not?"

The chief cleared his throat.

"Why, Mr. Gramont," he observed, nervously, "about the rest of the gang, we'll take care of 'em, sure! But it's different with Mr. Fell, here. He's a friend of the senator—"

"Different, h—ll!" snapped Gramont, angrily. "He's a criminal, no matter who his friends may be, and I have the proof of it!"

"Well, that may be so," admitted the chief of police. "But this thing is goin' to raise a h—l of a scandal, all up and down the state! You know that as well as I do. Now, if I was you, I'd act kind of slow—"

Gramont smiled bitterly.

"Perhaps you would, chief. In fact, I don't doubt that you would. But you are not me. Now, as a duly-appointed officer acting under authority of the governor of the state, I call upon you to arrest this criminal, and I make you duly responsible for his safe-keeping. Do you dare refuse?"

The chief hesitated. He looked at Fell for help, but none came. Fell seemed to be rather amused by the situation.

Gramont leaned back in his chair. The purpling features of the chief were streaming with perspiration; the man was in a frightful dilemma, and his plight was pitiable. At this instant Jachin Fell interposed.

"Let me speak, please," he said, gently. "My dear Mr. Gramont, it has just occurred to me that there may be a compromise—"

"I'm not compromising," snapped Gramont.

"Certainly not; I speak of our mutual friend here," and Fell indicated the chief with a bland gesture. "I believe that Judge Forester of this city is at present consulting with the governor at Baton Rouge on political matters. With them, also, is Senator Flaxman, who has come from Washington on the same errand. Now, it would be a very simple matter to end all this anxiety. Suppose that you call up the governor on long distance, from this telephone, and get his assurance that I am not to be arrested. Then you'll be convinced."

Gramont laughed with deep anger.

"You gangsters are all alike!" he said, turning to the desk telephone. "You think that because you have planted your slimy tentacles in high places you can do anything with absolute impunity. But the governor of this state is not in your clutches.

"He's a man, by heaven! I have his asurance that he'll prosecute to the limit whoever is behind this criminal gang—and he keeps his word! Don't think that if your friend the senator is with him, you will be saved. I'll call him, if only to show the chief, here, that influence is not going to count in this game."

Gramont took down the receiver, called long distance, and put in a hurried call for the executive mansion, asking for the governor in person.

"So you think that he's immune from influence, do you?" Jachin Fell smiled patronizingly and lighted a fresh cigar. The chief of police was mopping his brow.

"My dear Gramont, you exhibit a youthful confidence in human nature! Let me topple your clay-footed idol from its pedestal in a hurry. Mention to the governor that you have me under arrest, and that I have asked him to speak with Judge Forester and Senator Flaxman before confirming the arrest. I'll wager you five hundred dollars—"

The telephone rang sharply. Taunted almost beyond endurance, Gramont seized the instrument and made answer. In a moment he had the governor on the wire. His gaze went exultantly to Fell.

"Governor, this is Henry Gramont speaking," he said. I've just succeeded in my work, as I wired you this afternoon—no, hold on a minute! This is important.

"The head of the entire gang is a man here in New Orleans by the name of Jachin Fell. Yes, Fell. I find it very hard to get him arrested. Fell boasts that his influence is superior to any that I can bring to bear. He asks that you speak with Judge Forester and Senator Flaxman before confirming the arrest, and boasts that you will order me to keep my hands off.

"Speak with them, governor! If they're in the gang, too, don't you worry. You confirm this arrest, and I'll put Fell behind the bars if I have to turn all New Orleans inside out. Go ahead! I know you can't be reached by any of these crooks—I'm merely calling Fell's bluff. We have the chief of police here, and he's sweating. Eh? Sure. Take as long as you like, governor."

He smiled grimly at Jachin Fell as he waited. Two minutes passed—three—four. Then he heard the voice of the governor again.

"Yes?"

"Don't arrest him, Gramont."

"What?" Gramont gasped.

"Don't touch him, I said! Get in all the others, no matter who they are, but leave Fell alone—"

"You d—d coward!" shouted Gramont, in a heat of fury. "So this is the way you keep your promises, is it? And I thought you were above all influences—real American! You're a h—l of a governor—oh, I don't want to hear any more from you."

He jerked up the receiver.

There was a moment of dead silence in the room. The chief mopped his brow, in evident relief. Jachin Fell sat back in his chair and scrutinized Gramont with his thin-lipped smile.

Gramont sat helpless, wrung by chagrin, rage and impotency. There was nothing he could say, nothing he could do. The man behind him had failed him. The entire power of the state, which had been behind him, had failed him. There was no higher power to which he could appeal, except the power of the federal government. His head jerked up sharply.

"Fell, I've got evidence on you, and I've got the evidence to put this lottery business into federal hands. Boys! come in here!"

Wall-Paper Collecting.

The hobby of collecting wall paper had a distinguished pioneer in Sir Walter Scott, who in one of his letters narrates his delight in a gift which came to him when he was adorning Abbotsford. He was in a quandary as to an appropriate wall decoration for his "with-drawing room," which, with the library, was to be the most distinguished chamber in the mansion. Tapestry ran to too great a price, and as for ordinary designed wall-papers, they were lacking in distinction. But a friend who had sojourned for long in the East, and had brought home a collection of oriental objects, found among them a number of rolls of gilt Chinese paper, adorned with dragons and other reptiles of the imagination. He offered the rolls to Sir Walter, who saw in the design the very thing that suited. The paper stands today almost as fresh as when it was put up in the "Wizard's" baronial hall.

Children Cry For Fletcher's CASTORIA

Special Care of Baby.

That Baby should have a bed of its own all are agreed. Yet it is more reasonable for an infant to sleep with grown-ups than to use a man's medicine in an attempt to regulate the delicate organism of that same infant. Either practice is to be shunned. Neither would be tolerated by specialists in children's diseases.

Your Physician will tell you that Baby's medicine must be prepared with even greater care than Baby's food.

A Baby's stomach when in good health is too often disarranged by improper food. Could you for a moment, then, think of giving to your ailing child anything but a medicine especially prepared for Infants and Children? Don't be deceived.

Make a mental note of this:—It is important, Mothers, that you should remember that to function well, the digestive organs of your Baby must receive special care. No Baby is so abnormal that the desired results may be had from the use of medicines primarily prepared for grown-ups.

FOUND OUT WHAT WAS WRONG

Physician Might at Least Take Comfort in Fact That His Subconscious Mind Was Right.

Have you ever done a piece of work, conscious at the time that something was vitally wrong with it, but unable to figure out the defect until after the job was finished?

The "feeling that something is wrong" floats up vaporlike from the subconscious mind, one of every person's two brains.

A Toronto doctor toiled evenings for two winters building in his cellar an eighteen-foot motorboat for Muskoka lakes. At that time he was conscious that something was wrong, but could not figure it out, though he pondered in detail everything from engine to paint.

When it came time to take the boat to the freight train he abruptly learned what had bothered his subconscious brain: There was no way of getting the boat out of the cellar except by tearing a big hole in the foundations of the house and digging a deep opening to the outside.

BELIEVE IN OLD PROPHECY

Koreans Flock to Secure Holdings in What They Are Satisfied Is to Be Great City.

Kelyong, the lonely mountain of Korea, experienced a real-estate boom that made the oil-town promoter pale into insignificance. On a tiny piece of land on the mountain side were encamped 2,502 persons, forming 518 households, while hundreds more were gathered at the base, bidding high prices for the privilege of buying a bit of land among the favored.

The Korean prophet, Chyong Kam, whose writings have been preserved in the ancestral mausoleum of the one-time imperial family of Korea, long ago prophesied that Mount Kelyong would be chosen as the religious center of the sect which he founded and of the peninsula. His prophecy has recently been given great publicity, it is reported, and thousands of Koreans are flocking to the mountain, firm in their belief that it is to be one of the greatest cities of the world and that they are "getting in on the ground floor."

SILLY IDEA OF "BLUE BLOOD"

Austrian Aristocratic Requisites About on a Par With the Action of Foolish Boy.

Dean Hevkel of Lafayette college said at a dinner in Easton:

"The Austrian aristocracy must be taking Austria's new democratic government very hard, for Austrian society was the most rigidly exclusive in the world. You had to have four quarterings to your coat of arms—that is, all the way back to your grandfather and grandmother on both father's and mother's side, all your people had to be noble. A drop of common blood, and you were not received at court or in society.

"This absurd treatment of good Austrians who didn't happen to be noble deserved to vanish as it has vanished, for it was stupid, absurd, cruel. In fact, it was all of a piece with the action of the boy who was found stoning a frog and yelling savagely at it: "'I'll l'arn ye to be a frog!'—Indianapolis News.

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by
CLIFFORD L. HILTON
Attorney-General of Minnesota.
Addressed to
MIKE HOLM
Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA,
OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL,
June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

"Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law make the necessary provisions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate, based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund, and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of the amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business; and to require that the proceeds of such taxes shall be distributed in the manner following, to-wit: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund, and ten per cent to the permanent university fund.

Yours respectfully,
CLIFFORD L. HILTON,
Attorney General.

For Sheriff

To the Ladies and Gentlemen Voters of Marshall County:

I wish to state that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the County, giving me the highest number of votes cast for Sheriff at the primary election held June 19th, 1922.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter but owing to the large territory to be covered, that will be impossible.

Thanking you for the support received in the past, and respectfully soliciting your support and vote on Election day, November 7th,

Sincerely yours,
Justice Carlson.

To The Voters of Marshal County:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of Clerk of District Court of Marshall County.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on Election Day, November 7, 1922.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me; and if you elect me I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of Clerk of Court carefully and impartially to all.

Respectfully yours,
Peter E. Kvikstad.

P. B. Malberg for Co. Auditor

Having received the nomination for the office of County Auditor of Marshall County, and having very little time to personally visit the voters, I have to depend upon my old and new friends for their support and votes at the coming general election Nov. 7th, 1922.

Whatever you can and will do for me will be appreciated, and if you vote for and elect me, I shall do my very best to look after yours and the taxpayers interests carefully, efficiently and cheerfully, to the best of my ability.

Sincerely yours,
P. B. Malberg.

Political Advertising to be paid for at regular rates.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

I wish to state at the beginning of this campaign that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the county in making me one of their nominees for the very important office of County Auditor. During my administration of the County Auditor's office, I have endeavored to discharge the manifold duties of the office in a careful, prompt and efficient manner, to keep the books of the county neatly and correctly and in accordance with the law, and have always in my conduct of the office had the best interests of the tax payers in view. If favored with a re-election it shall be my highest purpose to serve the people to the very best of my ability in the future as in the past.

Respectfully,
A. G. Lundgren.

(Paid Political Advertising)

To The Voters Of Marshal County:

I hereby announce that I am a candidate for re-election to the office of Register of Deeds.

If re-elected, I shall continue to devote my entire time to the prompt and effecient performance of the duties of the office.

Thanking you for the support received in the past, and respectfully soliciting your support and vote on election day, November 7th, I am,

Respectfully yours,
Chas. E. Grinder.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

In announcing my candidacy for re-election to the office of Clerk of the District Court of Marshall County, I pledge courteous treatment, efficient, prompt and personal service, as I have tried to render during my incumbency in office, and I assure you that your vote and support is appreciated and will not be forgotten after election.

Sincerely yours,
Alfred C. Swandby.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

Her Military Aunt.

Mrs. Smallwaist was annoyed. Her maid was always going out.

"Sarah," said Mrs. Smallwaist, "I cannot have you continually going out. Next Sunday you must stay at home."

"Oh, but ma'am. I've promised my aunt to spend the afternoon with her."

It was just then that little Jackie chipped in.

Mrs. Harry Kagel

La Crosse, Wis.—"Motherhood left me with a weakness that caused me to become very nervous and weak. My back ached, I suffered from dizziness and fainting spells and my health was miserably poor. My mother-in-law advised me to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and I can say it is the best medicine I have ever taken. It relieved me entirely of these ailments and made me a strong and healthy person. I can highly recommend Favorite Prescription as a woman's medicine."—Mrs. Harry Kagel, 424 Loomis Street.

"You're willing to take care of all the rest of the gang, chief?"

"Sure," assented the officer.

"All right. Boys, turn over the whole crowd to the chief, and I'll trust you to see that they're properly booked and jailed. Turn over all the evidence likewise, except that mail sack. Have that brought up here, to this room, and see that the corridor outside is kept guarded. Get me?"

The two saluted. "Yes, sir."

"Good. Send to the federal building, find out where there's an agent of the Department of Justice, and get him here. Have him here inside of fifteen minutes."

"My dear Gramont, your devotion to duty is Roman in spirit," said Jachin Fell, lightly. "I really regret that circumstances so conspire to defeat you! Why can't you be satisfied with bagging so many other victims? You can't bag me—"

"Can't I?" said Gramont, taking a cigar and biting at it. He was cooler now. "By heavens, Fell, there's one thing in this country that you and no other man can reach with any influence, political bribery or crooked connections—and that's the government of the United States! You can reach judges and senators and governors, but you can't reach the unknown and humble men who carry the badge of the Department of Justice!"

Fell made a slight gesture.

"Human nature, my dear Gramont. It is quite true that I have not established this gang of criminals, as you call them, without taking proper precautions. Memphis Izzy, for instance, has influence that reaches far and wide. So have I. So have others in the party. I give you my assurance that your Department of Justice man will not arrest me."

Gramont paled.

Jachin Fell glanced at his watch.

"Lucie will be here at any minute now," he observed. "I suppose your sense of duty will force you to disclose everything to her?"

Gramont merely nodded, tight-lipped. A knock at the door, and one of his men entered with the sack of mail they had taken as evidence.

"A lady is coming here at any moment," said Gramont. "Allow her to enter."

The other saluted and departed.

"A sense of duty is a terrible thing," and Jachin Fell sighed. "What about the oil company? Are you going to let Miss Ledanois' fortunes go to wrack and ruin?"

"Better that," said Gramont, "than to have her profit come through criminal money and means. She'd be the first to say so, herself. But I'll tell you this: I'm convinced that there is oil under that land of hers! If she'll agree, I'll put up what money I have against her land; we'll be able to have one well drilled at least, on the chance!"

"If it's dry," said Fell, "you'll be broke."

"I can always get work," and Gramont laughed harshly.

Fell regarded him in silence a moment. Then: "I think Lucie loves you, Gramont."

A trembling seized Gramont; a furious impulse to shoot the man down as he sat. Did he have the baseness to try and save himself through Lucie? Something of his stifled anger must have shown in his eyes, for Jachin Fell laid down his cigar and continued quickly:

"Don't misunderstand. I say that I think she cares for you; it is merely surmise on my part. Lucie is one person for whom I'd do anything. I stand and have stood in the place of a parent to her. She is very dear to me. I have a special reason for intruding on your personal affairs in this manner, and some right to ask you in regard to your intentions."

"I don't recognize any right whatever on your part," said Gramont, steadily.

Fell smiled. "Ah! Then you are in love. Well, youth must be served!"

"I'd like to know one thing," struck in Gramont. "That is, why you were so cursed anxious to get something on my man Hammond! And why you held the Midnight Masquer affair over me as a threat. Did you suspect my business?"

Fell threw back his head and laughed in a hearty amusement that was quite unrestrained.

"That," he responded, "is really humorous! Do you know, I honestly thought you a fortune-hunter from Europe? There, I confess, I made a grave error."

Without a knock the door opened and Lucie Ledanois entered.

"Good evening, stockholders!" she exclaimed. "Do you know there's a crowd down in the street—policemen and automobiles and a lot of excitement?"

"Allow me," said Gramont, taking her coat and placing a chair for her. "Will you sit down, please? You remember that I warned you regarding a shock that would come; and now I must explain." Gramont gravely handed her his commission frfom the governor and resumed his seat. "When I say that I have come here, not to attend a meeting of our oil company, but to arrest Mr. Fell, you will understand. I am very sorry, Lucie, to have to tell you all this, for I know your attachment to him."

"Arrest—you, Uncle Jachin?" The girl glanced from the paper to Fell, who nodded. "Why—this isn't a joke of some kind?"

"None whatever, my dear," said Fell, quietly. "Mr. Gramont is to be congratulated. He has discovered that I was the head of a large organization of criminals. Here, if I mistake not, are your Department of Justice friends, Gramont."

"Here they are, sir—the chief agent and a deputy. Shall I let them in?"

Gramont nodded. Two men entered the room, and Gramont dismissed his own man with a gesture. He saw that the agents both nodded to Fell.

"Do you gentlemen know this man?" he demanded, rising.

"Yes," said one of them, regarding him keenly. "Who sent for us?"

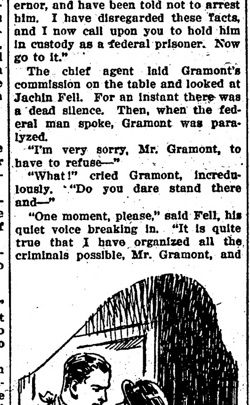
"I did." Gramont gave his name, and handed them his commission. "I have been investigating a lottery which has been conducted in this state for a long time by an organization of very clever criminals. Jachin Fell is the man at the head of this organization. The lesser members of the gang are in custody. The police department will not arrest this man Fell; his influence and that of his gang is extensive in political fields and elsewhere. I have called up the governor, and have been told not to arrest him. I have disregarded these facts, and I now call upon you to hold him in custody as a federal prisoner. Now go to it."

The chief agent laid Gramont's commission on the table and looked at Jachin Fell. For an instant there was a dead silence. Then, when the federal man spoke, Gramont was paralyzed.

"I'm very sorry, Mr. Gramont, to have to refuse—"

"What!" cried Gramont, incredulously. "Do you dare stand there and—"

"One moment, please," said Fell, his quiet voice breaking in. "It is quite true that I have organized all the criminals possible, Mr. Gramont, and have put the underground lottery into a systematized form. I have done this by the authority of the United States, in order to apprehend Memphis Izzy Gumberts and other men at one crack. These gentlemen will tell you that I am a special agent of the Department of Justice, employed in that capacity through the efforts of Judge Forester and Senator Flaxman. I regret that this had to be held so secret that not even the governor himself was aware of it until this evening. The conflict was quite unavoidable. Not a member of that gang must become aware of my real identity."



He Was Still Looking Into the Eyes of Lucie Ledanois.

Gramont sank into his chair, the automatic dropping from his hand. He was suddenly dazed, thunderstruck. Yet he had to believe. He was dimly aware that Lucie had gone to Jachin Fell, her arms about his neck. He stared from unseeing eyes.

Realization smote him like a blow, numbing his brain. He saw now why the governor had conferred with Judge Forester and the senator, why he had been ordered off the trail. He saw now why Fell had preserved secrecy so great that even to the chief of police his impregnable position was supposedly due to influence higher up.

He saw how Fell must have been working month after month, silently and terribly, to form one compact organization of the most talented criminals within reach—headed by Memphis Izzy, the man who had laughed at the government for years! And he saw himself furious, raging like a madman—

Gramont dropped his head into his hands. The pain of his forgotten wounded arm stabbed him like a knife. He jerked his head sharply up, and was aware that the agents had departed. He was alone with Lucie and Fell, and the latter was rising and holding out his hand smiling.

"Gramont, you got ahead of me in this deal, and I congratulate you with all my heart!" said Fell, earnestly. "Neither of us suspected the part played by the other man! but you've done the work and done it well. Will you shake hands?"

Gramont confusedly took the hand extended to him.

"I've been a fool," he said, slowly. "I might have guessed that something unusual was—"

"No; how could you guess?" said Fell. "There are three men in Baton Rouge who know the truth, and three persons in this room. That's all, outside of the regular government men. I had not told even Lucie, here! I dared not. And I dare say nothing even now. To the underworld at large I will be known as the crook whom not even the government could touch; in days to come I may be of untold service to my country."

"If you will excuse me one moment," he went on, "I shall speak with your men who are on guard, Gramont. I—ah—will be back in a moment, and we may then discuss business. If you agree, I think that your company may proceed upon the original lines, and we shall set to work drilling for oil without delay—"

Gramont scarcely heard the words, nor did he hear the door close. He was still looking into the eyes of Lucie Ledanois, and wondering if the message they held was really meant for him.

CHAPTER XVI

Mi-Careme.

A nameless gentleman from the effete North was enjoying for the first time the privileges of a guest card at the Chess and Checkers. In a somewhat perplexed manner he approached the secretary's desk and obtained a cigar. Then he paused, listening to the sounds of revelry which filled the club, and which came roaring in from the city streets outside.

"Say!" he addressed the secretary. "What's this Mi-Careme I've been reading about in the papers, anyhow? I thought everything was tight as a clam down here after Mardi Gras? It's still the Lenten season, isn't it? Mardi Gras doesn't come more than once a year? Then what's all the celebration about?"

The secretary smiled.

"Certainly, sir, it's still Lent. But the French people have what they call Mi-Careme, or Mid-Lent, and they certainly give it a big celebration! You see, it's a night halfway through Lent, when they can enjoy themselves to the limit—let off steam, as it were. We're having several dinner parties here in the club tonight, for the occasion."

A slightly built little man, who had much the air of a shy clerk—had it not been for his evening attire—approached the desk. He signed a check for a handful of cigars, which he stowed away.

"Please provide a fresh box later," he said to the secretary. "Most of my party is here, I believe."

"I'll send them up, Mr. Fell," answered the secretary, quickly. "Yes, I think the dining room is all ready for you, sir. By the way, Mr. Gramont was looking for you a moment ago—ah! Here he comes now!"

Jachin Fell turned. Gramont was plunging at him, a yellow telegraph form in his hand, excitement in his eyes.

"Look here, Jachin! This wire just came in from Hammond—you know, I left him in charge of things down at Bayou Terrebonne! Read it, man—read it! They've struck oil-sands at five hundred feet—and sands at five hundred, with these indications. It means a gusher at a thousand! Where's Lucie? Have you brought her?"

"She's upstairs. Well, well!" Jachin Fell glanced at the telegram, and returned it. "So oil is actually found! This is certainly going to be one big night. Come along. Let's find Lucie and tell her about it—"

The two men turned away together.

[THE END.]

Typographical Error Cost Life.

A typographical error once cost a woman her life. Shortly after the invention of printing, a German printer working on an edition of the Bible entrusted to his wife the setting up of the type for a portion of the Book of Genesis. There is a sentence in Genesis describing Eve's duty to Adam, which runs "He shall be thy Lord." The German word for Lord is "Herr" and that for fool is "Narr." The printer's wife changed the "e" to "a" and, in the crude type of that period, the capital "H" looked exactly like an "N." The sentence consequently read. "He shall be thy fool."

Many copies of the book got into circulation before the error was discovered. The ecclesiastical authorities were so enraged at what they considered the woman's impiety that they condemned her to the stake.

Says It Made a New Person of Her

Thousands of people needlessly endure a half-sick, nervous, run-down condition when they might enjoy sturdy, robust health and all its manifold blessings if they only knew what to do. People in this condition find Tanlac soon ends their trouble and builds up abundance of strength, energy and vitality. Mrs. Paul Lavreau, 67 S. Fitzhugh St., Rochester, N. Y., says:

"Sometime ago my health and strength left me all at once. I lost nineteen pounds in a short time and could hardly stay up. I gained five pounds on two bottles of Tanlac and it has made me perfectly well and strong again."

Nervousness and a run-down, tired-out feeling are but symptoms of a hidden cause, which usually lies in the stomach. Tanlac enables you to digest your food properly, eliminate waste and regain your old time strength and vigor. Get a bottle today at any good druggist.—Advertisement.

HOW TWO WOMEN ESCAPED OPERATIONS

Doctor Advised Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Happy Results in Both Cases

St. Joseph, Missouri.—"Both of my sides swelled and hurt me so that I could not move or do any of my work. There was heavy pressure and pains through my lower organs and the doctor told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for these troubles. He said I had this one chance, and if the Vegetable Compound did not help me nothing but an operation would. After taking several bottles I felt it was helping me and now I am able to do my own work. If my testimonial will help others I shall be glad for them to read it and hope your Vegetable Compound will do them as much good as it did me." —Mrs. WM. LOCKMAN, 513 N. 4th St., St. Joseph, Mo.

White Plains, N. Y.—"I had such a pain that I could hardly walk and the doctor said that I needed an operation. I was sick for a year before I started taking your medicine and I could not work. I saw your advertisement in a little book and that is how I came to take Lydia E. Pinkham's medicines. I have been taking the Vegetable Compound and Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine, also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and the capsules and prescription recommended. I am doing all my work and have gained twenty pounds. I am taking the medicines still, but I feel fine. You have my permission to use this letter for the good of others." —Mrs. MARY MARK, 37 Hamilton Ave., White Plains, N. Y.

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the commoner ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors, or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same.

When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

A Reminder.

A man was almost frantic with toothache. The only other person in the room was his pompous, pedantic, matter-of-fact aunt.

Presently the man burst out:

"Oh, I wish to goodness people were born without teeth."

His aunt glanced up from her paper.

"A moment's consideration, my dear Alfred," she said, "will remind you that that is precisely what does happen."

And she went on reading.

A tall, willowy young woman at Seventh avenue and Thirteenth street, New York, was reciting her complaint to an officer, charging a taxi driver who had jolted her car with failure to observe traffic regulations. The driver protested that she lied.

"I'll bring a complaint against her," said the driver. "She hasn't got a license."

"Yes, I have."

"Well, where is it?" asked the driver.

"Do I have to show it to him?" she asked the policeman.

"Show it to me," he said.

Without flinching, she lifted her skirts knee high, and produced the much desired license from her stocking.

New Ulm—The Minnesota river is as low as it has been in 25 years. The water level in the surface wells is also considerable lower than it has been. Many wells fail to furnish the usual quota of water, while some are already dry.

Minneapolis—The United States Grain Growers' Sales Company of Minneapolis, it was learned, has obtained a seat in the Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce and has opened an office in the Corn Exchange building.

St. Paul—The three airplanes of the 109th Aero Observation squadron which have been patrolling the fire district in northern Minnesota returned to St. Paul, a distance of 200 miles, in 95 minutes.

Rochester—Members of the city council assert they meant business when they passed an order directing the Chicago Great Western railroad to put its crossings in this city in safe condition or remove its tracks from the streets.

Virginia—Summons and complaint were filed in the action of A. W. Kerr & Co. against the city of Virginia, asking $12,000 damages resulting from the alleged repudiation of a contract for architectural services.

Granite Falls—The official call has been received here for the annual convention of the Minnesota Yellowstone Trail association at Appleton, Oct. 31. This meeting will be the seventh of a series of 14 in different states through which the trail passes.

St. Paul—Special class pupils of the St. Paul Public Schols will present a vaudeville program at the Orpheum Theatre at 9:30 A. M. October 27th. Blind pupils will offer several numbers on piano and ukelele. Pupils of corrective speech will present two playlets. Miss E. L. Woods, clinical psychologist and state supervisor of special classes of Wisconsin, will speak on "Mental Hygene for Teachers."

St. Cloud—Following a suit for $30,000 against the Pan Motor company and threats of other suits, creditors of the company were granted an order by Judge J. A. Roeser of the district court, appointing Edward E. Clark and R. L. Gale of St. Cloud receivers.

Albert Lea—Louis Johnson of this city claims the champion cow, from standpoint of stock production. The ainmal is a 5 year old grade Jersey, and within the last year has given birth to five calves. In the latter part of October, 1921, this cow dropped twin calves and last week added triplets to her family

TIRED OF THE "OLD STUFF"

Polyandrian Queen Welcomed Imported Novel for the Reason That It Struck New Note.

The queen of the Polyandrian isles reclined lazily upon her throne of masculine skulls. Her seven husbands had all gone a-hunting, and time lay heavily upon her hands. "Bring me a book!" she commanded, and seven virgins ran off to do her bidding.

"Bah!" she ejaculated after a time. "The same old stuff. Eight men pursuing one woman. I'm tired of this eternal polygon business. Fetch me one of those racy, risque, imported novels where one man and one woman brave the world and his wives and dare to love each other despite our polyandrian conventionality. They're a little bit immoral, perhaps, but what a relief from the banality of our everyday existence." — Philadelphia Ledger.

Sandy's Prediction for Son's Future, However, Contained One Rather Unfortunate Proviso.

In Scotland there is told a story of one Sandy McIntosh, who started to build a small outhouse of brick. After the usual plan of bricklayers he worked from the inside, and, as he had the material close beside him, the walls were rising fast when noon arrived, and with it his son, John, who brought his father's dinner.

With honest pride in his eye, Sandy looked at John over the wall on which he was engaged, and asked:

"How de ye think I am gettin' on?"

"Fine, father; but how dae ye get oot? You've forgot the door?"

One glance around him showed Sandy that his son was right; but, looking at him kindly, he said:

"Oh, but ye've got a grand held on ye, John! Ye'll be an architect yet, as sure's yer feyther's a builder!"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Moveable Mark.

A player and his caddy started off from the first tee. The man's drive had hooked badly into the rough. They hunted for the ball for some time and then the man turned to the boy and said: "Caddy, did you mark my ball?" "Yes," he answered, "I marked it." "What by?" asked the man. "By a bird," said the boy, "but it flew away."—Judge.

Royal Road to Success.

Whatever your occupation in life may be apply yourself to it seriously and diligently. Let it be the subject which dominates your thoughts, because your success will be measured by the interest you take in what you are doing. Intense interest will mean close application and hard work and it is only along that road that success and contentment are to be found.—Exchange.

Evidently Christians.

An American family living in China recently hired two servants from Nanking, a missionary center. Accordingly, the new servants were Christians. Another Chinese servant in the family discovered the newcomers' religion and reported the fact to his mistress. Asked how he knew the new boys were Christians, he said: "Oh, they know all about God, Jesus Christ, and Santa Claus."

TIP OFFERED TO DENTISTS

Writer Thinks Practice Might Mitigate the Horrors of Tooth-Pulling Operations.

A new idea for dentists.

If you've never had a tooth pulled don't read this suggestion, for it's beyond the comprehension of such. Far!

One certain friend of a certain dentist in this city, having read a delicious dissertation on the pulling of teeth via the novocaine method, happened upon the end of the story, in which the dentist said: "That's all. Perhaps you'd better have a little stimulant."

By way of suggestion to the local dentist his friend wrote: "By introducing this innovation there is no doubt but that you can soon take over the entire building for your practice. Of course, the technique of extraction will be lengthened. One pull by the dentist to be followed by one pull by the patient, and then, I suppose, a long pull all together."—Washington Star.

Danger in Osculation.

When one of the Talmadge girls was in Washington some time ago she was being shown through the senate chamber by a well-known Washingtonian. Seeing a rather handsome little page, she leaned forward and impulsively kissed him. I learned the other day that after the story had reached a certain group of young girlie girls the fortunate youngster has been eagerly sought after by those who would emulate the movie screen star's actions. The lad should remember, however, what kissing did for Captain Hobson of Spanish war fame.—Washington Star.

Ancient Greeks Took Gymnastics.

In every Greek city was established a gymnasium where crowds of young men exercised themselves naked. This institution was originally intended for those only who were in training for the Olympic games, but afterward it became part of the daily life. The Greeks went to the gymnasium with the same regularity as the Romans went to the bath.—Winwood Reade in "The Martyrdom of Man."

Naeseth Says:

Ladies and Gentlemen, May I again call your attention to my candidacy for County Attorney?

Kindly remember to place an X opposite the name of John R. Naeseth for County Attorney on Nov. 7th.

I was born on my father's farm in Goodhue County, Minn., in 1882, where I spent the summers helping with the farm work until I commenced the practice of law.

Received my education in the country school house, Luther College and the University of Minnesota, of which institutions I am a graduate. I hold the degree of bachelor of arts and the degree of bachelor of laws.

Came to Warren, Marshall County in 1912, where I have since lived and practiced my profession. I commenced life in Marshall County as a farm laborer on the Spaulding Farm, and have tried life as a farm hand, a teacher, and a lawyer, and know what it means to make a living for ones self and family.

Have twice received the indorsement of the town in which I live for the office of County Attorney, receiving in the election of 1918, 38 votes more than the other candidate, and receiving at the primary election this year 64 votes more than the other two candidates had together, and a plurality of 74 votes, for which I am sincerely thankful. I do indeed appreciate the fact that the people of Marshall County made it possible for me at the primary election this spring to carry 36 out of the 59 precincts in the county, and to receive 2061 votes out of the 4898 votes cast for all 3 candidates.

May I serve you as your next County Attorney? Will you kindly remember to mark an X opposite the name of John R. Naeseth for that office on Nov. 7th? If you elect me your County Attorney I shall endeavor to give Justice and Protection to all alike and enforce the laws without favor to anyone.

Your good will expressed through your vote will be appreciated after as well as before election.

Proposed Amendments to the Constitution of the State of Minnesota

Submitted by the Legislature at its General Session, 1921, to the People of Minnesota at the General 1922 Election Together with Statements of

Purpose and Effect of each

Prepared by

CLIFFORD L. HILTON

Attorney-General of Minnesota.

Addressed to

MIKE HOLM

Secretary of State.

ST. PAUL, MINNESOTA, OFFICE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL, June 30, 1922.

HONORABLE MIKE HOLM,
Secretary of State,
Capitol.

SIR:

As required by section 46, General Statutes of the state of Minnesota for the year 1913, I have the honor to furnish you, herewith, a statement of the purposes and effects of all amendments proposed to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by the legislature of 1921 and which are to be submitted to the electors of said state at the general election in 1922.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. ONE

Chapter 528, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921 proposes an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution of said state. Said section now reads as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota state railroad bonds,' under what purports to be an amendment to section ten of article nine, of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereby expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment."

If amended, said section will read as follows:

"The credit of the state shall never be given or loaned in aid of any individual, association or corporation, except as hereinafter provided. Nor shall there be any further issue of bonds denominated 'Minnesota State Railroad Bonds' under what purports to be an amendment to section 10 of article 9 of the constitution, adopted April 15, 1858, which is hereto expunged from the constitution, saving, excepting and reserving to the state, nevertheless, all rights, remedies and forfeitures accruing under said amendment. Provided, however, that for the purpose of developing the agricultural resources of the state, the state may establish and maintain a system of rural credits and thereby loan money and extend credit to the people of the state upon real estate security in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by law, and to issue and negotiate bonds to provide money to be so loaned. The limit of indebtedness contained in section 5 of this article shall not apply to the provisions of this section, and the purposes for which the credit of the state or the aforesaid municipal subdivisions thereof may be given or loaned as herein provided are declared to be public purposes."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to develop the agricultural resources of the state by authorizing the lending of money and credit of the state to the people upon real estate security.

The EFFECT of said amendment, if adopted, will be to authorize the enactment of laws by the legislature for the establishment and maintenance of a system of rural credits. The legislature will be empowered to provide money by the issuance and negotiation of bonds of the state to be loaned upon real estate security to the people of the state, and will be enabled to prescribe the terms and conditions upon which such money may be lent and such credit extended. There will be no limit of indebtedness in this respect, and the state will be enabled to issue and negotiate as many bonds for this purpose as it deems advisable.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT NO. TWO

Chapter 529, Session Laws of Minnesota for the year 1921, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the state of Minnesota by adding a new section to article 9, to be known as section 1A, to read as follows:

"Every person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation, or association, however or for whatever purpose organized, engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, shall pay to the state of Minnesota an occupation tax on the valuation of all ores mined or produced, which tax shall be in addition to all other taxes provided by law, said tax to be due and payable from such person, co-partnership, company, joint stock company, corporation or association however or for whatever purpose organized, on May first of the calendar year next following the mining or producing thereof. The valuation of ore for the purpose of determining the amount of tax to be paid shall be ascertained in the manner and method provided by law. Funds derived from the tax herein provided for shall be apportioned: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund and ten per cent to the permanent university fund. The legislature shall by law make the necessary provisions for carrying out the provisions of this section."

The PURPOSE of said amendment is to direct the legislature of the state of Minnesota to impose and to keep in effect an occupation tax upon those engaged in the business of mining or producing iron ore or other ores in this state, in addition to other taxes imposed by law, at a rate based upon the valuation of the ore produced, to be determined by the legislature and to provide for the proportionate distribution of such taxes to the general revenue fund, the permanent school fund, and the permanent university fund.

The EFFECT of the amendment, if adopted, will be to direct the legislature to impose and keep in effect such a tax upon those engaged in said business; and to require that the proceeds of such taxes shall be distributed in the manner following, to-wit: fifty per cent to the state general revenue fund, forty per cent to the permanent school fund, and ten per cent to the permanent university fund.

Yours respectfully,

CLIFFORD L. HILTON,

Attorney General.

The Holt Weekly News
By The
Holt Publishing Company
Published every Friday at Holt, Marshall County, Minnesota.
Entered as second-class matter Sept. 22, 1911, at the post office at Holt, Minnesota, under the act of March 3, 1879.

P. L. Anderson went to Fargo Thursday on a short business trip.

Miss Hilma Nyberg went to Fargo Saturday where she has employment.

Mrs. Teale of Fargo came Tuesday to visit her sister, Mrs. Sanoden and family.

Miss Ida Beierson has been visiting relatives in Thief River Falls this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fulton of Montana were here last week looking after their land interests.

Misses Nettie Boersheim and Mary Moberg returned Tuesday from Langdon, N. Dak. where they had bad been working in a cook car for a threshing crew.

Mr. and Mrs. Gunder Mickelson and family, Mr. and Mrs. Otto Reinhardt all of Crookston, and Mr. and Mrs. Herb Safford of Euclid, visited at the Sam Mickelson home Sunday.

The Nazareth Y. P. S. will hold a Halloween basket social in church basement Tuesday eve Oct. 31. A program will be given, a fish pond and other amusements provided. All invited to attend.

Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Christianson of Albert Lea and Mrs. W. L. Lund of Grand Forks visited with the C. W. Christianson family on Wednesday, returning the same day to Grand Forks.

We used to hear lots about the tonnage tax, but everything about it seems quiet this year, despite the fact its to be voted on as Amendment No. 2. Everyone should vote for this amendment and tax.

Mrs. Hagberg and daughter, Mrs. Sorum left Thursday for Badger and their car of house hold goods were shipped the same day. Verna and Esther departed the day before. Mrs. Sorum expects to leave Badger Saturday for their new home at Arvilla N. Dak.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren went to Roseau Tuesday and returned Wednesday. The physician removed the cast from her ankle and put on another. Mrs. Holmgren is getting along as well as could be expected.

The railroad company sent a relief agent here to take Mr. Holmgren's place while he was away.

Mrs. Sam Mickelson was called to Crookston Friday by the illness of her father, Mr. Storholm. She returned home Sunday morning as she was needed so badly here on account of Mr. Mickelson's continued poor health.

Word was received here Wednesday that Mr. Storholm passed away that morning.

Mrs. Nygaard had both bones of her right arm broken on Wednesday afternoon when her horse became frightened at a truck and backed into the ditch, tipping the buggy over and throwing her out. The accident happened a half mile north from town. Mr. Norbeck the driver of the truck immediately brot the injured lady to town, to the home of her daughter, Mrs. Axel Nelson. Dr. Froehlich was called and he set the broken bones and made her as comfortable as possible.

J. M. Swan shipped a car of sheep to the markets Saturday.

Miss Agot Nygaard went to Crookston Wednesday to look for work.

Mrs. C. Ring went to Alexandria Thursday to visit relatives and friends.

Mrs. Hagberg has rented their house to G. Sanoden who expects to move there next week.

Vote for Mike Holm for Secretary of State. He is a northern Minnesota man and a splendid official.

Dr. Turley, the dentist, will be in Holt from 3 P. M. Friday Nov. 3rd, until 2 P.M. Saturday Nov. 4th

Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Hougard and children of Strandquist, visited Monday at the C. W. Christianson home.

Ole Grove returned home Saturday from Hoople, N. Dak. where he had been working in the grain and potato fields.

There is considerable complaint of cattle running at large and if it continues they will be shut up and held for damages.

The Amendments are just as important as the rest of the ticket, and everybody should vote "Yes" on Amendments Nos. 1 and 2.

All candidates for county offices are making active campaigns, and even the candidates for judges have woke up enough to put up posters.

Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Carlson took her mother, Mrs. Sollom and brother Johnny to Middle River Saturday where they will make their home.

P. L. Anderson purchased from the Holt State Bank last week the D. Payne house where he and his wife have been residing since their marriage.

Racine Olson and Mrs. Mickelson went to Crookston this morning (Friday) to attend the funeral of her father which will be held this afternoon.

Gullek Svenson and son Martin, Mr. and Mrs. O. M. Larson and Mrs. H. Furr, all made a short visit last week with relatives and friends in Canada.

Mrs. Abrahamson who has been staying with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Borensheim, for several weeks left Tuesday for her home near Gatzke.

Herbert Gilbertson who had been visiting at K. T. Knutson's, left Monday for a visit with relatives at Plummer before returning to his home at Adams, N. D.

Mikkel Johnson died Wednesday evening at his home a few miles southeast of Holt. He was about 67 year old and had suffered for several years from diabetes.

Vote for the tonnage tax, known as Amendment No. 2. This important measure needs every vote from the country districts, as the cities are not interested in either amendment, and in order to carry they are required to have a majority of the total vote. Therefore failure to vote on them is the same as voting "No."

Peat has about the same heat value as an equal weight of air dried wood. Minnesota has peat that could be cut out and dried and used in place of either wood or coal. The best fuel peat is found in sloughs, bogs and marches.

Dr. Terley, the dentist, will be in Holt next Friday and Saturday and will have a room upstairs at the Central Hotel.

Free Mission Church

Rev Myhrer will hold services at 8 o'clock Sunday evening.

Rev. Kriedt will hold English services at 8 P. M. Monday.

For Sheriff

To the Ladies and Gentlemen Voters of Marshall County:

I wish to state that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the County, giving me the highest number of votes cast for Sheriff at the primary election held June 19th, 1922.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter but owing to the large territory to be covered, that will be impossible.

Thanking you for the support received in the past, and respectfully soliciting your support and vote on Election day, November 7th,

Sincerely yours,

Justice Carlson.

Take the Sting Out of Winter
The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.
Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.
The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.
This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.
We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

Mrs. Addie Hottell.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"I want to make this public expression of what Dr. Pierce's medicines have done for me. Some years ago I was in a weak, run-down condition with neither strength nor ambition. A neighbor suggested that I take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I secured a bottle from the drug store and this was so helpful that I had no need of a second bottle. To those whose condition needs building up I can and do recommend Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery." —Mrs. Addie Hottell, 711 Buchanan St., N. E.

Bright Idea.

An Evansville young man, whenever out of the city, instead of writing to his best girl, sends her every few days a box of candy. She is delighted with his plan and boasts of it to her girl friends, who straightway hint to their admirers to do the same.

One of the admirers went to the first-named young man on his return from one of these trips and made complaint of this habit of his. "The other girls are expecting us fellows to do it, too," he said. "We can't see why you do it. It's expensive and—"

"Yes," admitted the candy sender, "it is expensive, but it's mighty safe. Candy could never tell tales in a breach-of-promise suit."—Indianapolis News.

VENGEANCE!

Opie Read

Supposing you were a young man who had served in a war and escaped its perils and that the future were rosy with promise, excepting that fate had called upon you to execute a grim and terrible purpose; the circumstances being that during the conflict, an outlaw operating under the semi-sanction of guerrilla warfare had raided your home and murdered your father, and then, hanging his body to a tree, had insolently pinned a card to it bearing the outlaw's name! Would not you likely do as Virgil Drace did—swear a solemn vow to find that outlaw, hang him as high as Haman, and decorate his corpse with your own card? Then, while you were setting about to execute that vow, suppose you met a fascinating girl with whom you fell in love and had the satisfaction of finding your affection sincerely reciprocated. Then supposing it developed that the girl were the daughter of the man upon whom you had sworn to wreak vengeance. What would you do? Is it not a satisfactory web upon which to weave an intensely interesting story of romance, especially when the incidents occurred in the South following the Civil war, the young man a northern officer, the girl a beautiful, fiery southerner, and all the other characters and episodes of the South and that turbulent period which marked the days of reconstruction? Would it not be more absorbing if, as in this case, the author were one of the greatest of American novelists? You will find this stirring romance worked out in the most charming way in "Periwinkle House," by Opie Read.

No man in the United States has written as many stories as Opie Read, and no author has had a larger number of readers. He was born in a small town in Tennessee in 1852; followed newspaper work for awhile in Kentucky, and then moved to Little Rock, Ark., where he edited the Arkansas Gazette from 1878 to 1881. He was next on the staff of the Cleveland (O.) Leader and then returned to Little Rock, where he established the Arkansaw Traveler, a humorous paper which attracted the attention of the entire English-speaking world. Mr. Read furnished most of the material that went into the publication. He conducted it from 1883 to 1891 and then moved to Chicago, where he has since resided, engaged in literary work.

It is doubtful if Opie Read himself could recall the titles of all the books he has written, without referring to a list. One or more of them is in nearly every home where fiction is indulged in throughout the land. They form a conspicuous part of the fiction section of every public library, and are carried in stock by every enterprising book dealer. During late years he has been less prolific, due to the fact that he has not had the leisure for writing, for he has become one of the most sought after lecturers, and his time is practically filled with Chautauqua, Lyceum and special platform engagements. In this work he has covered practically the entire nation.

Out upon the sheen of the mighty river the pine-torch flames fell in rippling streams, and the full moon, peeping over the tall timber, made mouths at herself in the wrinkled mirror of flood. On the steamboat Leona the negro deck-hands were chanting the buoyant anthem of the June rise. In the gilt, enameled saloon, a sweet-stringed waltz, centuries removed from the melodic bellow of the black bucks below, swelled out upon a breeze that seemed eager to mingle with it, while sentiment smiled and gallantry bowed in the studied graces of a floating ballroom on the Mississippi. All ceremony was precise with the inherited observance of precedent, save when some hair-greased and less refined dandy of the woods, having lingered too long at the bar, let liquor fly to his heels to cut a rebellious pigeon-wing.

The boundless ranch of the West was unknown, and along the lower Mississippi lay the great plantations of America. Except for the toil of the slaves, industrial life had been only a sort of happy indolence; but society held many a thrilling charm, and with its libraries from Europe, intellectual life indulged the luxury of ceremonious romanticism. This atmosphere was still breathed on the big Mississippi steamboats, for fantasies which render poetic the condition of us all linger on the water after having been driven from the land.

In the ballroom of the Leona the dress of the men and the women was variegated with the odd ends of different periods of style. Old chests, hidden during the Civil war, only a few years past, had been opened to give up the faintly scented fluffs and gourd-flowered vests of Andrew Jackson's day; and the brigadier in ruffled shirt poured gallantry's extravagant figures of speech upon the graceful young dame arrayed in the silk that had adorned the form of her grandmother when in the village of Washington she waltzed with Lafayette.

During a lull in the music-measured capering a tall, handsome young man, garbed in the fashion of the day, passed with long and careless strides from one end of the saloon and out toward the upper deck.

Admiring eyes were bent upon him; and one lady turned to her partner and said:

"Oh, please, Colonel, tell me who he is."

The Colonel placed his right hand on the bosom of his ruffled shirt and bowed. "Miss Lucy," he said, "it would be one of the satisfactions of my life to gratify your more than natural curiosity, but that pleasure is denied me. I can't tell you who he is."

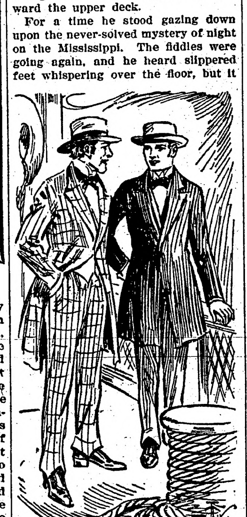
And then—because the Colonel had sighed his own sentimental distress in the presence of Miss Lucy and because her curiosity concerning the young stranger stirred a jealous qualm—he added: "He looks like a Yankee to me."

The young man was a Yankee. And because he was journeying to the South upon a grim and terrible mission, the gayeties of the ballroom had grated upon him and he had sought the solitude of the upper deck. Yet it was this moment that Fate chose to bring him face to face with one who was to change the whole course of his life.

For as he turned into a long passageway, aflame with light but deserted, there suddenly entered at the far end a girl thrilling in litheness and almost barbaric in dress. In swift unconsciousness of him she approached, a great handful of roses in red glare hiding her features. She lowered her hand; he caught full view of her face; and it seemed to him that his heart ceased to beat, like a pendulum caught and halted, then thrown again into motion. She did not look at him as he slowly passed her. He gazed into her eyes as she bent them upon the roses held out in front of her; and then he wheeled about to follow her. She turned into a cross-passage, was gone; he ran to the entrance, but she had vanished.

In the young man's heart was a struggle to call her, but there was no appropriate word; and then sobered, the Yankee smiled at himself. But the smile did not balm his delicious wounds, and he continued his search into the ballroom. There were many handsome women, belles of proud villages, but to none did he give a second glance. Again he passed out toward the upper deck.

For a time he stood gazing down upon the never-solved mystery of night on the Mississippi. The fiddles were going again, and he heard slippered feet whispering over the floor, but it seemed to him that this scene of gayety was forced, like a melancholy laugh; it reminded him of a book of poems in tatters, of a love-letter in faded ink.



"Then Tremble; I Am Liberty Shottle."

Built about one of the smokestacks was a shanty of boards called the "dog house." Turning a corner of the shanty, the young man stumbled against some one; a man growled in resentment.

"I beg your pardon!"

"I should say you do!" A young fellow of unusual height and of humorous slimness came forth out of the shadow. The boat was landing, and a turpentine-torch on the shore revealed him, pale and long of face, with collar cut low and chin standing high.

"Yes, sir," he added, "and although it may not be necessary on this occasion, yet if you knew who I am, you would apologize some more."

"Ah, you don't say!" replied the Yankee, smiling. "And as you seem to be fond of the music of apology, will you please tell me who you are?"

"I can do that easy enough, but I don't wish to frighten you."

"You are considerate. But the fact is I rather enjoy the sensation of fright."

"Then tremble: I am Liberty Shottle."

"What, you don't mean that you are really Liberty Shottle!"

"I swear it."

"Well, well! And now will you please enlighten me as to who Liberty Shottle is? And why do you suppose that people who have heard of you, tremble in your presence? What have you done?"

"Sir, modesty puts a clamp on me. . . . And now would you mind telling me your name?"

"Not at all. My name is Virgil Drace."

"You don't say? Well, well! But I never heard of you, either." Now they laughed, the joyous and unsuspicious mirth of youth. They stood looking down upon the deck-hands, loading freight, listening to the stream of the second mate's profanity, who swore his emotion by the stars, the moon, the river, the universe; and when the Leona was on her way again, the fiddles going, the muddy roustabouts singing, Liberty Shottle and Drace seated themselves on campstools, eagering toward swift acquaintance, the friendship of two natures far apart in aim and principle.

"If you've got two cigars, I'll join you in a smoke," said Shottle. "Thank you. You see, my people, what few of them are left, say that I don't exist. They haven't cast me off, or anything of that sort, but being of staid habits themselves, they swear that I am too unreal to exist. Lord, what is the world but queer? What's your game?"

"I haven't any—any game," parried the Northerner. "But what are you doing on this boat yourself?"

"I'm going down to New Orleans," replied Liberty, "to see how long I can stay there. I had a pretty fair job a couple of months ago teaching a school near Memphis. They liked me, too. I've got a sheep's hide from Chapel Hill university, North Carolina, with all the wool singed off and the board acknowledged my qualifications, but they caught me shaking dice with the boys and told me that as there were some branches of learning they didn't care to have instilled, I'd better get a professorship in some higher institution. Have you been in there?"

"Only passed through. I've been rather worn with that sort of thing."

"Oh, you think I meant the ball! I meant the poker-room."

"Yes, I sat in there for a time."

"How did you come out?"

"Not very well. Lost two hundred."

"You speak of losing two hundred as lightly as if it were a matter of breath instead of blood. Would you mind holding my hand till you say it again? Two hundred! Why, you know, a fellow would teach bullet-heads and sissies for two months for two hundred dollars . . . Now, let me lay down a proposition: I am lucky tonight. I lost fifteen dollars, all I had, but I'd just got up to the point of winning when I lost my last dollar. Just one more ante, and it would have come my way. I saw it coming, but a blundering fool headed it off. Now, here's my scheme, and it's a good one: you want your two hundred back; you stake me to a hundred, and I'll go in there and make a cleaning. Don't refuse, now, until you have let your mind digest the situation. Most of the errors in this life come from snap judgment."

"Ah, you think you can win, because you lost?"

"My dear Virgil, there is, you might say, a psychology in everything. Who wins a fight? The man who believes he can't? No, the man who knows he can. And I know right now. Why, I'd stake my life on it. You give me the hundred and stay right here and wait. As for my honesty, I can give you references—the mayor of New Orleans and Judge Hebbins of Memphis—but he died last week. No matter — I'd jump into the river and let the paddle-wheel beat me into sausagemeat before I'd deceive you. Liberty Shottle, that's my name!"

Drace leaned back and laughed. "Liberty, a thing astonishing to me is going to happen. I'll stake you to the hundred."

No superstitious devotee ever received from the priest of the gods a libation with more of emotional strain than Liberty Shottle evinced when he closed in tight clutch on Drace's adventurous hundred. Then he bowed and disappeared.

Drace sat musing, and soon he began to wonder why he had been so weak as to give $100 to this peculiar fellow, a stranger. Well, Liberty had amused him. Made him laugh, and in this world there is more money spent for the promotion of laughter than for the relief of tears.

Presently Shottle returned. He sat down and though physically he was light, the camp stool groaned beneath him. Drace waited. The Leona blew her great horn and all the world seemed to tremble. When the sound had died, echoing miles away, the gambler coughed lightly and groaned. Drace wondered why he should be tickled over any one's misfortune, but he felt a merry tingling in his blood.

"Bass voice! Do you know what I'd like to do? I'd like to bore a ten-inch hole in her bottom and let her go down."

"You must have lost, Liberty."

"Alfred Drace, with the compliments of Stepho la Vitte."

DOES LAUNDRY WORK AND HOUSEWORK TOO

Surprised to Find Herself Feeling So Well

Taunton, Mass.—"I used to have pains in my back and legs so badly, with other troubles that women sometimes have, that my doctor ordered me to stay in bed a week in every month. It didn't do me much good, so one day after talking with a friend who took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for about the same troubles I had, I thought I would try it also. I find that I can work in the laundry all through the time and do my housework, too. Last month I was so surprised at myself to be up and around and feeling so good while before I used to feel completely lifeless. I have told some of the girls who work with me and have such troubles to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I tell them how it has helped me. You can use my testimonial for the good of others."—Mrs. BLANCHE SILVIA, 69 Grant St., Taunton, Mass.

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is prescribed by physicians; used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

FARMERS FACE HUGE LOSSES

Grain Elevators, Warehouses Filled to Capacity; Potatoes Lie on Ground.

NO RELIEF IN SIGHT

Car Shortage Situation Is Most Acute in History of State With Bumper Crops in Northwest to Be Marketed.

Fargo—With grain elevators and potato warehouses everywhere filled to capacity and with no cars available, farmers in every section of North Dakota are facing huge financial losses and one of the most serious marketing problems in the history of the state. Late reports indicate that the situation is much more serious than previously indicated.

In many places wheat and potatoes are lying on the ground. Killing frosts have come frequently of late, and the potato crop has been seriously damaged in a number of places. Appeals for cars have failed so far as obtaining the cars is concerned.

Commercial organizations everywhere have gone to every length to obtain cars, but the railroads have been unable to promise anything. Attempts have been made here and there to move empties into marketing centers, but only two or three cars have been available to each locality. They were entirely inadequate to move even the smallest fraction of the crop. Farmers have tried to get grain and potatoes into storage quarters, but every square foot of space has long since been taken. Old garages have been seized in a number of places, and the crop has been dumped into these.

Today no one can tell how it will end.

Conditions in Northwest Bad.

Minot—With winter rapidly approaching, specific reports received here from many of the northwest sections of North Dakota indicate that a critical condition exists as regards the shortage of freight cars for wheat and other grain shipments. A report from Crosby said that on Wednesday of last week all six of the Crosby grain elevators were filled to capacity and the doors of all were closed, and between 50 and 60 farmers were in the city unable to dispose of grain.

A. A. Robinson of Minot, manager of the Logan Farmers elevator at Logan, a small station on the Soo line, a few miles east of Minot, said that his concern has received only two cars in three weeks and the elevator is full to the brim. From personal observation, he said, he knows that many farmers have thousands of bushels of grain lying on the ground because of the boxcar shortage.

WAR CLOUDS BREAK IN CHINA

Deposed President Plotting to Gain China Coast.

Amoy, China—A political conspiracy which may mean another disastrous civil war in China is believed to have been uncovered in the province of Fukien, whose capital, Foochow, recently was taken by the invading forces of Hsu Tsung-Chi.

According to advices from Foochow, Sun Yat Sen, deposed president of South China, has plotted with Chang Tso-Lin, the Manchurian war lord, Tuan Shi Jui; Hsu Shu Cheng, known as "Little Hsu"; Chang Wen Sung of Anhui and Lu Yun Hsiang of Pekin, to form a coalition of the Fengtien, Anfu and Kwomingtang parties. This coalition, it is said, plans to take Shantung and drive General Chen Chiung Ming from Kwangtung and Chi Hsieh Yuan from Kwangsi, thus gaining control of the Chinese coast.

The unification plan will mean the creation of a formidable foe in General Wu Pei Fu, the conqueror of Chang Tso Lin. There was said to be a possibility of General Tsao Kun, the north military leader, joining the coalition.

FEW MEN NOW WITHOUT JOB

Washington—Improved business conditions and increased employment, with almost no able men seeking work, now obtain in practically all sections ofthe United States, according to a report by the department of labor. The conclusion is based upon telegraphic responses to a query sent out through the United States employment service to every state, the agents of service in their answers indicating an almost universal shortage of common labor and a very general demand for skilled workmen in a wide variety of trades and occupations.

Jap Cruiser to Russia.

Honolulu—The Japanese cruiser Chikuma has been ordered to proceed to Vladivostok at the request of the consul general there, according to a cable dispatch to the Nippu Jiji, Japanese language newspaper here. The soviet army is said to be advancing on Vladivostok and it is expected that the arms and munitions now in custody will be turned over to the reds. General Dietriechs, commander of the defeated anti-Soviet forces is declared to have fled to Manchuria.

AND THEY GET AWAY WITH IT

Truly, the Female of the Species Is More Fortunate Than the Inferior Male.

Two cases in Judge Chesebro's court.

First, the graceless male arrested for speeding after having imbibed two glasses of claret, $250 or 180 days in jail.

Second the graceful maiden who drove her limousine into a man, failed to stop and render assistance, bumped into a cab and hit a flivver. And all without a drop of claret. Ten days in jail—suspended.

The graceless male might have done a lot of damage, of course, but actually his guilt was confined to "reckless driving."

The graceful female did do a lot of damage. But, of course, she never meant to, and she couldn't help it, and she was nervous, and there were tears in her eyes instead of claret on her breath, so there you are!

Votes for women. The ladies, bless 'em!—Los Angeles Times.

COPPER ALWAYS IN DEMAND

Durability of the Metal Has Made It Almost Indispensable for Variety of Purposes.

The many uses of copper may be imagined from the size of the output. It is said that if the United States were to cease producing, either all the trolley cars or all the armies of the world would cease operating, for outside of Michigan and Montana there is not enough copper in existence to supply both.

In the building trade copper is in great demand on account of its durability. At first glance the amount of copper seems to be negligible in comparison with iron and steel. It is used for such things as roofing, flashings, cornices, gutters, drain pipes, leaders and ventilators. These are nearly all copper in the large office buildings. In the Woolworth building, in New York, which is today the world's tallest skyscraper, there is approximately a million pounds of copper used for roofings, elevators and interior decoration.

WHERE FORMALITY IS WAIVED

Introductions Not Absolutely Demanded When Gentlemen Engage in Game of Craps.

Abe Jackson (colored) was indicted for stealing money from the station agent of a railroad. As the railroads were then under the control of the government, the trial was in a United States court.

The station agent, who was white, testified that he did not know Jackson and had never seen him before the day of the theft.

Jackson's defense was ingenious. He did not deny that he got the money from the agent, but claimed that he won it.

The presiding judge seemed astounded at the defense, and asked: "Do you mean to tell me that you won this money from the agent shooting craps?"

"Yes, suh."

"Why, the agent doesn't know you—never saw you before that day!"

"'Deed, jedge, you don't have to know folks tuh shoot craps wif 'em!"—Judge.

Try the Grocer, first!

SLEEPLESS nights and daytime irritation, when caused by coffee drinking, often require a call on the grocer to avoid a later call on the doctor.

Postum, instead of coffee, has brought restful nights and brighter days for thousands of people—together with complete satisfaction to taste.

You will enjoy the full, rich flavor and aroma of Postum, and nerves will be free from any possibility of irritation from coffee's drug, caffeine. You can begin the test today with an order to your grocer.

Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages, for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared) made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

Vote for A. N. ECKSTROM for County Attorney

He has always stood for law enforcement, and an efficient and economical business administration.

His Record Is Clear

For Superintendent of Schools

Education is the unfolding of the mind.

To weigh evidence and render unbiased decision is judicial temperament.

Attention to detail, and vigor pursuant to duties is efficiency.

Nels M. Engen

Naeseth Says:

Ladies and Gentlemen, May I again call your attention to my candidacy for County Attorney?

Kindly remember to place an X opposite the name of John R. Naeseth for County Attorney on Nov. 7th.

I was born on my father's farm in Goodhue County, Minn., in 1882, where I spent the summers helping with the farm work until I commenced the practice of law.

Received my education in the country school house, Luther College and the University of Minnesota, of which institutions I am a graduate. I hold the degree of bachelor of arts and the degree of bachelor of laws.

Came to Warren, Marshall County in 1912, where I have since lived and practiced my profession. I commenced life in Marshall County as a farm laborer on the Spaulding Farm, and have tried life as a farm hand, a teacher, and a lawyer, and know what it means to make a living for ones self and family.

Have twice received the indorsement of the town in which I live for the office of County Attorney, receiving in the election of 1918, 38 votes more than the other candidate, and receiving at the primary election this year 64 votes more than the other two candidates had together, and a plurality of 74 votes, for which I am sincerely thankful. I do indeed appreciate the fact that the people of Marshall County made it possible for me at the primary election this spring to carry 36 out of the 59 precincts in the county, and to receive 2061 votes out of the 4398 votes cast for all 3 candidates.

May I serve you as your next County Attorney? Will you kindly remember to mark an X opposite the name of John R. Naeseth for that office on Nov. 7th? If you elect me your County Attorney I shall endeavor to give Justice and Protection to all alike and enforce the laws without favor to anyone.

Your good will expressed through your vote will be appreciated after as well as before election.

J. R. NAESETH

If you have relatives or friends from other places come to visit you, or you go to visit them, we would appreciate it if you would tell us the news.

Mr. Fladeland is being urged for county commissioner by his friends as they believe he will be able to get the road graded and graveled between Holt and Grygla. The village of Grygla will take up this matter at a mass meeting Oct. 28th.

If this road will help one, it will help the other, therefore it is of common interest to both villages.

Loyd Knutson went to Mahnomen Sunday to work for Reierson & Nohre.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Olson of Crookston visited here this week with relatives.

Miss Anna Erickson of Thief River Falls was a business visitor in Holt Tuesday.

Mrs. Riesberg and son Walmer, attended the funeral of Mrs. Turnlund at Radium Sunday.

Raymond Wegge came Saturday night from Larimore, N. D. for a short visit at home.

O. H. Nohre came Friday for a few days enforced vacation caused by an injury to his foot.

Miss Helen Anderson went to Stillwater one day the past week to attend a business college.

Dr. Turley, the dentist, will be in Holt from 3 P. M. Friday Nov. 3rd, until 2 P.M. Saturday Nov. 4th

Jesse Sorum and Hans Hanson visited here Sunday. Mrs. Jesse Sorum returned to Arvilla, N. D. with them that evening.

A baby girl was born to Mr. and Mrs. Ole Grove Saturday but lived only a few hours. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. Ordahl Tuesday.

The Nazareth Young Peoples Society will meet in the church basement Sunday evening Nov. 12th. Mrs. Martin Mattson, Miss Nettie Boersheim and Clara Larson will serve.

Two years ago some of the candidates for county office did'nt think the county was big enough to devide. Now they are howling about its being so big that they can't see all the voters before election.

A contribution has been handed us which claims that the Esch-Cummings law has been grossly misrepresented, in that it only guaranteed the railroads 6 per cent earnings for six months, and that it has not been in force since Sept. 1920. The writer thinks if the people understood this law rightly that they would feel differently about it.

For Judge of District Court.

G. Halvorson, Thief River Falls

As a candidate for District Judge Mr. Halvorson is standing on his ability as a lawyer, his experience at the bar of public justice and his knowledge of world affairs through actual contact. He has worked his own way. Has raised and educated a family and is an honored and appreciated citizen.

He will not stoop to petty politics and refuses to appeal to class or personal prejudice. If elected he will not perpetuate himself in office by making a political machine out of the bar. Every person coming into his Court will be treated impartially and justly. If you want a man in the high office of District Judge who is fearless and free from gang, class or party influence you will vote for Mr. Halvorson.

New Bank To Open Monday

A. H. Nieter of Minneapolis was here Monday on business in connection with the new bank, which will be known as the Marchall County State Bank of Holt.

J. W. Black of Minneapolis, will be president of the new bank, Mr. Nieter, vice president and R. J. Lund of Wanamingo, Minn., will be cashier.

They will be here on Monday Nov. 6th. and open the new bank, and will be ready to do business in all lines of banking.

Mr. Black was one of the first directors of the Federal Reserve Bank and was on the board for six years. He has been in the banking and investment business since that time in Minneapolis and devotes all of his time to that work.

A. H. Nieter, who will be the vice president, has been in the banking and investment business in the Ninth Reserve district for fifteen years and at the present time is associated with Mr. Black in various state and national banks, located in Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota.

Mr. Lund is a young married man with ten years banking experience, and has the highest recommendations. He has worked in agricultural communities similar to this and understands the needs and requirments of the people, and the service that a good bank can render to a community.

The various banks in which these people are interested, are not operated as chain banks, but each bank is a local institution operated and directed by local people for the benifit and development of the territory in which it is located.

The principal stockholders of this bank, are bankers devoting all of their time to that business, giving such assistance as they can to the banks in which they are interested. They do not have paper to sell to their banks, thereby taking the funds out of the community, and prohibit the exchange of paper between their banks.

The Marshall County State Bank of Holt has purchased the Holt State Bank building and will be located at the old stand.

The News wishes them success.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Lund arrived in Holt Wednesday night and will occupy Mrs. Sollom's house.

Clarence Moen has finished the state road north of town, east to the river.

Carl Nyberg came Sunday from Mahnomen to visit his mother and sisters.

The polling place for the village will be in the council room instead of the Sollom store building.

C. W. Christianson is doing blacksmithing for a short time at New Prairie, Minn.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Johnson, Mrs. Ellestead and daughter, Miss Gladys were Thief River Falls visitors Saturday.

Gunder Sorter, E. A. Erickson and Joseph Jarland have hauled in a lot of sweet clover seed this week which they sold to an Omaha firm for 5 to 5 1-2 cents a pound.

For Sheriff

To the Ladies and Gentlemen Voters of Marshall County:

I wish to state that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the County, giving me the highest number of votes cast for Sheriff at the primary election held June 19th, 1922.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter but owing to the large territory to be covered, that will be impossible.

Thanking you for the support received in the past, and respectfully soliciting your support and vote on Election day, November 7th,

Sincerely yours,
Justice Carlson.

To The Voters of Marshal County:

I wish to announce my candidacy for the office of Clerk of District Court of Marshall County.

I would like to make a personal call on every voter, but owing to the large territory to be covered, this will be impossible. I will therefore have to rely on my old and new friends for their support and for their votes on Election Day, November 7, 1922.

I shall sincerely appreciate whatever you do for me; and if you elect me I shall do my very best to serve the people and fulfill the duties of the office of Clerk of Court carefully and impartially to all.

Respectfully yours,
Peter E. Kvikstad.

P. B. Malberg for Co. Auditor

Having received the nomination for the office of County Auditor of Marshall County, and having very little time to personally visit the voters, I have to depend upon my old and new friends for their support and votes at the coming general election Nov. 7th, 1922.

Whatever you can and will do for me will be appreciated, and if you vote for and elect me, I shall do my very best to look after yours and the taxpayers interests carefully, efficiently and cheerfully, to the best of my ability.

Sincerely yours,
P. B. Malberg.

To The Voters Of Marshall County:

I wish to state at the beginning of this campaign that I greatly appreciate the confidence placed in me by the good people of the county in making me one of their nominees for the very important office of County Auditor. During my administration of the County Auditor's office, I have endeavored to discharge the manifold duties of the office in a careful, prompt and efficient manner, to keep the books of the county neatly and correctly and in accordance with the law, and have always in my conduct of the office had the best interests of the tax payers in view. If favored with a re-election it shall be my highest purpose to serve the people to the very best of my ability in the future as in the past.

Respectfully,
A. G. Lundgren.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

Radio Equipment of Airplane.

There has been installed on one of the huge Goliath biplanes engaged in the Paris-London aerial service a combined radio telephone and telegraph equipment of 35 watts antenna output with a sending range of about 180 miles at 900 meters' wave length. The complete radio equipment, according to Radioelectricite, weighs only 125 pounds. An air-propeller-driven generator for six volts and a six-volt storage battery supply the necessary current. A three-bulb amplifier is used for receiving on all wave lengths between 300 meters and 1,000 meters.—Scientific American.

Work Without Proper Aim.

I respect the man who knows distinctly what he wishes. The greater part of all the mischief in the world arises from the fact that men do not sufficiently understand their own aims. They have undertaken to build a tower, and spend no more labor on the foundation than would be necessary to build a hut.—Goethe.

VENGEANCE!

SYNOPSIS—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance.

"Don't call me Liberty. Call me Lib—just Lib; that's enough. But let me tell you something. Never in all my life have I ever come as near being a rich man as I was just now. I had won—by George, I had so much money stacked up in front of me that a mulatto from the North called me 'marster.' And then a cog slipped. We could have split and had a small fortune apiece."

"Blundering fool again?" Drace inquired.

"Yes, sir, and I was the fool. I wanted to be a rich man—and came within one of it. You know, sometimes Fortune hesitates as to whether she shall crown you or slap you."

"In your case, she didn't seem to hesitate long, Lib."

"No the hair-tangled hag! And then do you know what she did just as I was forced to get up from the table in as hot a fever as ever scorched a man's blood? She smiled at me. Now, I'll swear to that. But it's all over. A fellow has his little day, and then stretches out and lets the undertaker measure him."

"Yes, Lib, and I'd advise him to bring along extra tape when he comes after you."

Shottle attempted to smile, but the fever within him was still so hot that his effort ended in a grim tightening of the mouth.

"That's all right, Virgil, but you must remember that you are one out of a million. How a fellow can lose $200 at poker and get up from the table with money still in his pocket is beyond me. However, it means that you haven't got poker in your blood, which of itself is a marvel. But I want to tell you that every man is food for some sort of desperate passion. If it isn't gambling, it may be love. How about that?"

"Hasn't caught me yet," answered Drace, stoutly, even though the picture of the girl in the passageway was at the moment floating bright before his mind's eye. "Of course," he added, "I may marry, Liberty; that sort of thing runs in our family, you know. But I don't think the subject very interesting."

"I grant you. In this we walk shoulder to shoulder. But there is something of vital interest. Just now —I lost."

"Yes, and a very natural thing," Drace agreed.

"No, it wasn't natural. It was unnatural that I should lose just at that time. It was an accident. Listen to me for just a minute. Anybody can do the natural and expected thing. A dog or a cat or any other animal always does. It is doing the thing that nature didn't intend that marks the progress of civilization. Now, I have a proposition to make that may seem unnatural. Perhaps no man you ever met before would make it. But you never met such a man as I am, before. You couldn't look forward and see me. Could you?"

"I didn't," Drace cheerfully admitted.

"And it would have been hard for you to believe that I exist, which I don't, according to the belief of some of my folks. Now, then, what are we getting at? Another stake? No, I am not going to ask you to risk any more of your money. But this is my proposition: You let me have $100; if I win, I'll pay back all I owe. And if I don't, I'll belong to you—your property, body and soul — but with this understanding, I am not to perform any menial service in public. And it is further understood and agreed upon that if by any chance I can raise $100, I am to have the privilege of buying my freedom. The first 100, you understand, was a stake and not a loan. Before you decide, weigh the advantages of owning a man. I will be your Greek, your enslaved philosopher, be your Epictetus and turn your mill. We will revive the ethics of ancient society. Won't that prove that history really does repeat itself?"

"Yes," answered Drace, "but I don't care any more whether history repeats herself than I do that a stammering man repeats himself."

"Now, my dear friend soon to be my master, I hope—I ask you; isn't it something to own a companionable slave?"

"Yes. By the way, do you know New Orleans very well?"

"What! Does a bloodhound know the scent of a darkey?"

"All right, Lib—here's $100. And I believe that within an hour from now you'll be my property."

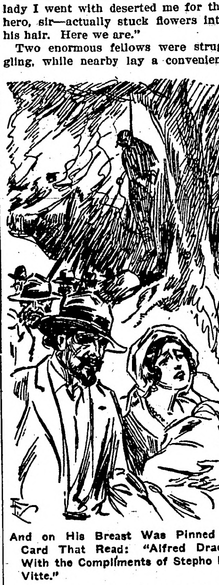
CHAPTER II

Drace sat musing over the strange creature who had just left him, but soon his mind flowed down another channel, far different from a whim or an amusement—his mission in the South, secret, grim and desperate. But life on a river steamboat in that day left little time for brooding for, a few moments after Shottle left to risk his liberty and Drace's hundred, a roustabout thrust his head in at the door and announced that down on the deck there was to be a throwing and tying match. The big fireman of the Leona was about to encounter Vicksburg Joe for the championship of the River.

In an instant Drace was on his feet, all his instincts keen and ready to jump. He was something of a boxer and wrestler, but he had not been taught in this peculiar art of tying an adversary once one has thrown him. And there was that in his mind which made the acquisition of this knowledge seem to him desirable indeed.

As he joined a group of men making their way below, he overheard the Colonel, Miss Lucy's admirer, explaining the gentle pastime. "Tying a man once you have thrown him," the Colonel was saying, "is the climax of prowess. I saw Cal Blodgett throw and tie Nick Pavin at a barbecue at Mount Zion campground, and I have cause to remember it, for the young lady I went with deserted me for the hero, sir—actually stuck flowers into his hair. Here we are."

Two enormous fellows were struggling, while nearby lay a convenient rope. Finally Vicksburg Joe tied the fireman, and he lay helpless, unable to get up.



And on His Breast Was Pinned a Card That Read: "Alfred Drace, With the Compliments of Stepho La Vitte."

"I will give you five dollars if you can throw me and tie me that way," called Drace to the victor when the excitement had a little subsided.

Joe looked at Drace a moment. The young man looked powerful enough to be dangerous, but—five dollars was five dollars. He smiled, bowed, spread out the wrinkled rug and took Drace by the hand to lead him forth. To the astonishment of all, Drace threw Master Joe; but he could not tie the champion.

"Show me how it's done," said Virgil, "and I'll give you the money."

For a long time, and until the Colonel and Shottle were worn out with waiting, the two struggled; and so apt was the student that he succeeded finally in turning the master over and tying him. But it seemed that the burly champion was too willing, and Drace insisted on another fall. And now, though the struggle was genuine on Joe's part, Drace tied him. Still more, another five promised, and Virgil was willing to quit.

"Finest sport I ever had!" he said as he turned away to the upper deck again to avoid the questions and felicitations showered upon him. . . .

Drace was musing—not, it must be confessed, upon the serious purposes which had brought him to the South, but upon that girl of the red roses—when Shottle appeared again. Liberty stood in his presence, not with a droop but straight in the manly resolution to discharge the duties an adverse fate had thrust upon him. In the belief that it would make him look more like a slave, he now wore his coat turned wrong side out.

"Master, I salute you," he remarked.

"All right," said Drace. "But turn your coat. I want my slave, the grinder of my mill, to appear respectably clad. You may sit down."

"I thank you, sir."

"You didn't last long."

"No, master. The tangled-haired hag kicked me sidewise, like a cow. In only two pots! But what can you expect of a man that has an ace-full beaten? How long can a man preserve his freedom at that rate? And a fellow with a spindle chin and a nose no bigger than the average wart beat me with four jacks. Crushed me! And he would have crushed Julius Caesar just the same. Well, after all, freedom has many responsibilities. As a slave I'll cultivate what virtues I can get hold of, and look toward old age and a cabin on the hillside. And now, as it is natural for every man to hide his degradation, will you permit me to call you Virgil in the presence of other people?"

"I thought you didn't believe in the natural thing! But all right; I grant your request. And now I suppose I'd better give you some pocket-change. It isn't well for even a slave to be broke."

The slave's face brightened with hope. "You couldn't make it as much as five dollars, could you?"

"No, thirty cents."

Shottle took the money and sat drooping. Drace gave him a cigar, and they smoked for a time in silence. At last Shottle looked toward Drace, his face guiltless of the whimsical humor that had hitherto possessed it.

"Master," he said, "I don't want to be inquisitive, and if I'm prying into what's none of my business, I won't mind your saying so. But I want to be a faithful slave, and I can serve you best if I know what—what are my master's purposes in life. For example, was there any special reason for your learning to throw and tie that way? Is there anybody in particular I could help you to put the rope on?"

Drace made no answer for a moment, but bent a searching eye upon his new servitor. Somehow the man's soul seemed to shine transparent in his face.

"Liberty," he said, "did you ever hear of a man named Stepho la Vitte?"

Liberty nodded. "Yes, I've heard of him; they say he's an outlaw, a smuggler."

"And worse," said Drace. "He's the man who—Liberty, give me your word, your oath, that you'll keep this a sacred secret!"

Liberty gave his word and his oath with a certain quaint dignity, and Drace went on:

"Liberty, before the war my father, Alfred Drace, was manager of a line of steamboats on the Ohio. In his employ was the creole Stepho la Vitte. After a time it came to my father's knowledge that Stepho was not only dishonest in ordinary dealings but had been guilty of piracy along the Gulf coast. And so my father dismissed Stepho from a position which the creole's dishonesty had made lucrative and valuable to him.

"Just after that," Drace went on, "the war broke out. La Vitte became a guerrilla—one of the men of Quantrell's stamp, who kept out of the army but who gathered in bands and lived by rapine along the border. I was only a little boy, Liberty, when La Vitte's band of guerrillas crossed the Ohio near Cincinnati and raided the little town where we lived. But the horror of that night still burns like a flame in my brain, Liberty."

Drace stopped, drew from a breast pocket a card and handed it to Shottle. On it was written in bold black characters: "Stepho la Vitte, with the compliments of Alfred Drace's son Virgil."

Shottle read the card, then looked inquiringly at Drace:

"Liberty," the young man explained, "those guerrillas under La Vitte burned our little town and killed nearly every grown man in it. For word was brought of their coming, and the men—nearly all of them married men or old—who had not gone to the war seized weapons and went out to defend their houses.

"They were massacred almost to a man. . . . And it was not plunder alone that led them to choose our little town for outrage, Liberty, but a passion for revenge. For next morning my father was found hanging to a tree. And on his breast was pinned a card that read: 'Alfred Drace, with the compliments of Stepho la Vitte."

Liberty looked again at the card he held in his hand, then handed it back to Drace. "I reckon I understand now, master," he said. "You are huntin' this Stepho to—"

"To hang him as high as Haman and to pin that card on his breast," declared Drace passionately. "While my mother lived, Liberty, I could do nothing. You know how women are in such matters. But—she died this spring, Liberty, after long years of grieving for the man that d—d outlaw foully murdered. Now I am free to strike for my honor and my father's memory—to carry justice to that murderer."

"The barbaric rose maid—the girl who had touched his heart with a torch."

ORNAMENT FOR BOBBED HAIR

Feather Band Now Used to Decorate Milady's Locks—May Be Worn High or Low.

Feathers, which claim the utmost attention in fans, are trying for equal prominence as hair ornaments. They appear in the loveliest hair bands, some of which tower to great heights, while others are worn low on the head, the plumage either shooting upward from the middle of the brow or falling over the ears.

Blue glycerined ostrich placed at the sides of a blue velvet band studded with rhinestones droops gracefully over either ear. Another model consists of a narrow rhinestone band with green feathered wings perched jauntily at the sides directly over the ears.

One-sided effects are evidenced in bands in which a large silk flower or a twisted velvet leaf is placed at one side only.

The woman who has bobbed her hair may wear it in the new, tightly drawn fashion by employing one of the combs or bandeaux which are made expressly for her. A particularly appealing ornament is made of silver wire and rhinestones, and resembles a horseshoe. The hair is combed straight back and then drawn through the ornament, which is placed at the back of the head in an upright position with the rounded part at the top.

Still another arrangement for bobbed hair is to catch it up under a band, the front of which consists of silver wire with connecting bars and the back of flowers.

French Brassieres.

French brassieres are made of very wide satin ribbon, unstayed and fitted with darts, and picoted where the armhole is cut away. They come well below the waist and make practically a fitted lining when finished.

Veil Novelties.

Many novelties in veils are shown. Heavy embroidery, silver or gold insets and colored borders vary the appearance of these very feminine accessories.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Duluth—Fifteen complaints in which the defendants seek redress totalling more than $60,000 were filed in district court here on the last day of filing notes of issue for the November term.

Albert Lea—Frank De Graff has sold the hotel Freeborn here to E. E. Arnold of Mason City, Iowa, who will take possession at once.

Brainerd—An area six miles long has been burned over by forest fires near Mildred, north of here, according to reports reaching here, but the fires have been extinguished. Fires near Hillman destroyed a quantity of hay.

Duluth—Duluth and the range must have 15,000 members in the American Red Cross this year if it is to properly carry out its work in the near east, George M. Crosby told members of the Duluth chapter at its annual meeting.

Marshall—A complete reorganization of the Marshall Milling company will become effective Nov. 1. Minneapolis men have interested themselves in the institution. The mill has a capacity of 3,000 barrels of flour a day.

Winona—The yacht North Star, owned by Dr. W. J. Mayo of Rochester, is at the dock here ready to leave for a long cruise down the Mississippi to Plaquemine, La.

Luverne—Luverne banks have taken extra precautions against holdups by having firearms placed within easy range. Several long range rifles also have been placed in second stories of business houses which offer a clear view to bank entrances for emergency use.

St. Paul—A reduction of storage rates on potatoes in Minnesota warehouses from five and a half cents to four cents the hundredweight per month was granted by warehouse officials, following a conference with O. P. B. Jacobson, chairman of the Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse commission.

Willmar—The Young People's Federation of the Lutheran Free Church of America will hold their annual convention here Nov. 2 to 5.

Minneapolis—Legislation aiming at a "carnival proof" Minnesota will be introduced into the next session of the legislature by the Women's Co-operative alliance, according to plans announced.

St. Paul—St. Paul Boy Scouts will pay $13,000 for a 60 acre tract on the shore of Lake Elmo, 12 miles east of St. Paul, to be used as a permanent camp site, it was announced, following a meeting of the Ramsey county council. There are 73 troops of Scouts in Ramsey county, with a total membership of 1,605.

Rochester—A group of business men headed by Henry Schuster, a local realtor, are planning to offer winter entertainment to young folk of Rochester and vicinity in a municipal dance hall and outdoor skating rink this season.

Minneapolis—Dr. Boyd S. Gardner, chief of the section of dental surgery of the Mayo clinic, Rochester, will speak before the Minneapolis Dental society here.

St. Paul—Representatives of the Greater St. Paul committee, the city of St. Paul, the Northern States Power company and the Markham, Kelsey, Drewer interests attended a meeting of the Wisconsin railroad and warehouse commission at Madison, at which all applications for development of waterpower on the St. Croix river were reviewed.

Duluth—Adoption of a state statute by the legislature giving towns and villages authority to donate funds for the upkeep of humane societies within the county was advocated by Judge A. E. McInnes of Gilbert at a meeting of the St. Louis county humane society.

St. Cloud—Rev. E. V. Campbell for the last 58 years pastor of the Congregational church here, has resigned. The church's congregation has unanimously elected him pastor emeritus. A resolution was adopted for the placing of a bronze tablet in the vestry entry, which will bear the inscription stating that the church was dedicated by the life service of Dr. Campbell and his wife.

St. Paul—Wherever common barberry bushes have been thoroughly eradicated in Western Europe black stem rust has been brought under control and the losses to grain growers reduced to insignificant proportions, according to Dr. E. C. Stakman, plant pathologist at the University of Minnesota, who has just returned from a six months' tour abroad. Dr. Stakman is a recognized international authority on the subject. He was sent to Europe by the United States department of agriculture to report upon the result of foreign efforts to combat black stem rust by eradicating barberry bushes. He said the evidence of the success of this prevention method was even stronger than he had expected to find.

Hibbing—Demands that the sheriff's office, probation agents and law enforcement officials take steps to stop the manufacture and sale of moonshine in the Nett Lake Indian reservation were made in resolutions adopted here by the grand jury.

Hibbing—A committee of representatives of St. Louis and Itasca counties school boards now are making a round of cities in Southern Minnesota to obtain first hand information on school conditions. The information gathered by the committee on its tour will be used in presenting figures and arguments to the state legislature.

A Return Desired.

"How was the political speaking last night, squire?" asked old Rifey Rezzidew of Petunia. "My rheumatiz was hectoring me so that I didn't feel like attending."

"The Hon. Thomas Rott pleaded with the voters for a return to the principles of the glorious Old Party, and—" replied Squire Ramsbottom.

"He did, hey? That reminds me: if he is in town yet I am going around and plead with him for the return of them ten dollars he borrowed from me six years ago, when he started for the convention."—Kansas City Star.

A Foreign City.

A friend who spent several months in the East, says the thing that impressed him most about New York is that it is a foreign city.

The municipal signs are printed in English, Italian and Yiddish. You hear more foreign language than English in the subway, and everywhere foreign language newspapers are seen. In large sections of the city you do not see an American, or hear English spoken.

COAL OF VEGETABLE ORIGIN

Abundant Proof That Huge Forests, In Former Epochs of the Earth, Became Petrified.

Although in most instances there are comparatively few traces of its vegetable origin left, coal owes its existence to the vast masses of vegetable matter deposited through the luxuriant growth of plants in former epochs of the earth's history, and since slowly converted into a petrified state.

Coal fields today present abundant indications of the existence of huge ancient forests, usually in the form of coal formed from the roots of trees. Several such forests have been uncovered, one of which in Nova Scotia is a good example. Remains of trees have been found there, six to eight feet in height and four feet in diameter. In a colliery in England, in a space of about one-quarter of an acre, there have been found the fossilized stumps of 73 trees, with roots attached, and broken-off trunks lying about, one of them 30 feet long, and all of them turned into coal.

Monkey Reasons.

It used to be thought that beasts and birds were guided in their action entirely by instinct, reason playing no part whatever in their daily lives. But now naturalists are not so sure. To learn to use a lever as a mechanical instrument implies, one would think, a certain amount of reasoning power. Yet a monkey kept in captivity employed a stick to pry up the lid of a chest which was otherwise too heavy for the animal to raise.

A great person expects everything of himself; the small person expects everything of others.

The man who does his best is a success, whether the world thinks so or not.

But I have got good results from it and am now able to do my housework most of the time. I recommend your medicine to those who have similar troubles. I do not like publicity, but if it will help other women I will be glad for you to use my letter."—Mrs. FANNIE ROSENSTEIN, 882 N. Holly St., Phila., Pa.

Detroit, Michigan—"During the Change of Life I had a lot of stomach trouble and was bothered a great deal with hot flashes. Sometimes I was not able to do any work at all. I read about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in your little books and took it with very good results. I keep house and am able now to do all my own work. I recommend your medicine and am willing for you to publish my testimonial."—Mrs. J. S. LIVERNOIS, 2051 Junction Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

The critical time of a woman's life usually comes between the years of 45 and 50, and is often beset with annoying symptoms such as nervousness, irritability, melancholia. Heat flashes or waves of heat appear to pass over the body, cause the face to be very red and often bring on headache, dizziness and a sense of suffocation.

Another annoying symptom which comes at this time is an inability to recall names, dates or other small facts. This is liable to make a woman lose confidence in herself. She becomes nervous, avoids meeting strangers and dreads to go out alone.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is especially adapted to help women at this time. It exercises a restorative influence, tones and strengthens the system, and assists nature in the long weeks and months covering this period. Let it help carry you through this time of life. It is a splendid medicine for the middle-aged woman. It is prepared from medicinal roots and herbs and contains no harmful drugs or narcotics.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent you free upon request. Write to the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

BIRD IS FAST ON ITS FEET

California Roadrunner Famous for Its Custom of Sprinting in Front of Trotting Horses.

A bird known as the California roadrunner has earned his common name from his delight in sprinting along roadways, especially when pursued by horsemen or moderately slow-going vehicles. In the picturesque old days of California it was no uncommon sight to see this bird running a half-mile or so in front of fast-trotting horses.

The bird belongs wholly to the West. Formerly he ranged from the plains of Kansas to the chapparal-covered hills of the Pacific coast and from central California to Mexico, but he is rapidly becoming rare. He is built like a heron, except for his short legs, but, unlike that water-loving bird, chooses deserts for his home. He has wings, but scarcely has the power to fly, though he is one of the fleetest of runners.

Not the Influence.

"Is that man who puts on so many airs under the influence of liquor?"

"No," replied Miss Cayenne. "He's a bootlegger. His proud ostentation is due to the affluence of liquor.

PLAN TO CONTROL WEATHER

Scheme Has Been the Dream of Many Scientists, but Nothing Practical Has Been Evolved.

Three or four years ago a Sheffield (Eng.) workingman claimed to be putting the finishing touches to an instrument to enable him "to focus beams of ether oscillation" and so control the weather. Unfortunately, the instrument could not have been so perfect as he thought, for nothing further has been heard of it. Before that a Leeds scientist had come to the conclusion that it was "within the scope of human possibility to prevent disastrous cyclones, hurricanes and storms, and even to improve permanently the weather of the British isles." The idea was the production of an instrument enabling the operator to collect or dissemble the molecules which form the atmosphere, securing the degree of density desired and so arranging the best weather required for a district or seasonal occupation. More than twelve years ago Sir Oliver Lodge demonstrated that fog could be dispelled by electricity, though the process was too costly to be used generally.

POSTUM CEREAL
INSTANT POSTUM

It's a main highway

THE way to satisfaction, comfort and health through Postum, has become a world-wide way.

This famous table beverage which has stood the test of twenty-five years, fills every requirement of taste for a hot and invigorating mealtime drink. Unlike coffee or tea, Postum contains nothing that can irritate nerves or disturb digestion. Even the children may safely enjoy it.

Wouldn't it be well for you to avoid the harm which so many have found in coffee and tea, and protect health while pleasing taste, with wholesome, satisfying Postum?

Order from your grocer today!

Postum comes in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages), for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

The two forms are equally delicious; and the cost is only about ½c per cup.

Paul Marschalk For State Senator

Hon. Paul Marschalk is the man of the hour in the minds of many people who still remember his able services while a member of the legislature for this district in 1913.

In this district composed of Marshall, Roseau and Kittson Counties there are no less than 15 languages spoken—15 different nationalities—it is the so-called melting pot of Minnesota, yet this man, Paul Marschalk is universally loved by all. He began life among us in a very modest way. He was always human. He played, he worked, he loved—he lived and served. He might have accumulated a comfortable fortune, but he can leave no richer legacy than the honest, enduring friendships of the people he served, so well, and often and in many practical ways helped during his services in the legislature.

As a legislator, Minnesota never had a more able defender of the cause of the common people. When the interests of his district or his state were at stake, he was fair, and his honest and earnest efforts were at once directed to an honest and effective solution of its problems. Special or selfish interests never moved him to forget there are two sides to every question. He was a careful student of the peoples problems, he knew the viewpoint of his people back home, he knew the cause of the mucker in the mines, he knew the interests of the steel magnate in New York and he strove to solve their problems and reconcile the good in them all for the best interests of the common welfare.

That's why Paul Marschalk is held in so high esteem by his old-time constituents, and that's why they will elect him to the state senate, Nov. 7th.—Kittson County Enterprise, Oct. 13, 1922.

(Issued by the Paul Marschalk for Senator Club, Roseau, Minn., G. H. Mattson, Sec'y.)

The Election

The election Tuesday was a political landslide and many officeholders were elected to stay at home.

The republicans loose several U. S. senators and probably the house, and the democrat made gains almost every where.

Minnesota has elected Shipstead U. S. senator, but the republicans have probably elected the rest of the state ticket by a small vote.

Steenerson and Volstead are among those defeated. Both of our district judges were re-elected.

Gov. Nestos of North Dakota has been re-elected by a good vote and Frazier is probably elected U. S. senator.

Holt village cast 89 votes as follows: Amendment No. 1, 75 yes, and 3 No. Amendment No 2, 78 yes and 2 No. Kellogg 22, Shipstead 54, Olson, 10, Preus 46, Johnson 41, Collins 44, Siegler 41; Bryon 3, Mike Holm 58, Stageberg 25, Swanson 4, Chase 41, Deming 41, Casey 2, Rines 48, Keyes 40, Hilton 42, Smelker 38, Doran 4, Bowen 38, Royster 43, North 8, Kaercher 37, VanLear 44, Hebl 4, Anderson 53, Quinn 22, Steenerson 31, Wefald 51, Halvorson 49, Watts 29, Bishop 37, Grindeland 23, Landby 51, Marschalk 27, Green 55, Furun 9, Malberg 64, Lundgren 22, Bakke 75, Grinder 38, Olson 46, Hanson 76, Carlson 9, Eckstrom 30 Naeseth 57, Quist 71, Kvikstad 33, Swandby 53, Engen 46, Johnson 51 Fladeland 24, McMillian 60.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house through every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

Rev. B. M. Bridges Gives Facts in His Case

It is doubtful if there has ever been a medicine endorsed by so many ministers of the Gospel as has Tanlac. Indeed, there is scarcely a faith, creed or denomination in all the land in which one, or more, of the clergymen has not publicly expressed their indebtedness to the Premier Preparation for the benefits they have derived from its use.

One of the latest to speak out in this connection is Rev. B. M. Bridges, a widely known and beloved Baptist preacher, residing at Mooresboro, N. C., whose statement follows:

"Tanlac has given me a good appetite, toned up my system and renewed my strength in such a gratifying way that I am glad to recommend it to anyone who is in a run-down condition. For ten years past I have had such a severe case of indigestion that I could not find anything to eat that agreed with me. Finally I became very nervous and could get but very little sleep or rest.

"It seems that I took nearly everything trying to get myself right, but nothing helped me until I ran across Tanlac. My nerves are so much better now that my sleep is sound and refreshing. I enjoy my meals and have also gained weight. I can say from experience that Tanlac is a splendid medicine and tonic, for it has built me up wonderfully."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.—Advertisement.

Do Dreams Come True?

A southern Indiana man a few evenings ago went into a drug store in his town and bought a quart of red whisky, "the kind we used to get," being fortunate in getting one of two quarts the druggist had. The latter asserted he was going to keep the second quart for his own use.

The buyer stole away from the drug store with his package, mentally debating whether he should share his prize with friends. After several moments of anxiety he came to his decision. No one but himself should ever taste a drop of the precious liquid.

Then the baby cried and he woke up.—Indianapolis News.

> SYNOPSIS—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace gets his mind off his mission by entering into deck sports in which he exhibits an unusual athletic prowess. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman.

With an awkward gesture Liberty stretched forth a hand, caught Drace's and wrung it warmly. "You're like—like Hamlet!" he exclaimed. "I'll do my best to help you, Hamlet. Let me be your Horatio as well as your slave."

Drace returned the fervent handclasp. "My Horatio!" he agreed. And then, solemn again, he added: "It's a worthy cause, Liberty. It's not alone my private vengeance, but the wrongs of a whole community that the ordinary machinery of justice can never right. Why, Liberty, dozens of men were murdered by those drunken fiends; little children were trodden under the hoofs of their horses, and women— Near our house, Liberty, an old couple live in poverty. At the time of Stepho's raid their son and his young wife lived next door to them; they were well-to-do and prosperous. The day of the raid the son had received ten thousand dollars from the sale of some lands. When rumor of the raiders came, he hurriedly hid the money somewhere in the neighborhood, scribbled on a piece of paper the location of that treasure and gave it to his wife before he went out with the other men to fight. Next morning he had been shot; and the young wife had been carried off by those devils—her child with her, after the Indian custom, to keep her from suicide. No one knows what became of her. Nor has that money ever been found. Liberty, if I could find Stepho, get him in my power, I believe I could at least learn what became of that poor young woman—possibly find that paper and learn where to find the money those poor people so sorely need; for once, some years ago, a mysterious fellow was caught digging about their yard. . . . But I've talked enough, Liberty. Action! Do you know any more about La Vitte?"

"Not much," replied Liberty. "I believe he is often seen up the River, and sometimes down on the coast. He has his friends, and nearly everybody else is afraid of him. So you—we—must keep dark till we get our chance. And you mustn't show your feelings in your face. Remember, master, you're just a young man out to see the world. H'm—here comes Colonel Josh. Suppose we talk to him. He was a mule-buyer in the war and may know something about Stepho."

The door was darkened. In came Joshua Mortimer, the man whom Miss Lucy had plied with questions concerning Drace. He had dodged in for a smoke, he said, when Shottle had introduced him to his master, and it was evident that it was his aim to impress Drace with his military bearing. He had not been actually in the army, but had acquired the title of colonel from his adventurous work of buying mules for the Confederate government. The Colonel "took it" that Drace was from the North.

"Yes, but some of my people were from the South."

"Ah! I congratulate you, sir. I have a match, thank you."

Drace had offered him a light. He filled his pipe with tobacco crumbs dug out of his breeches pocket, and, long legs crossed, sat back to enjoy himself.

"Well, sir, Mr. Drace, the war has been ended some years; and if we forget an evil as easily as a virtue, sir, it will soon be only a dim memory. I had enough of it."

"But you were not really in the army, Colonel Josh," the slave spoke up.

The Colonel pulled at his pipe, stretched his neck and appeared to fish for something down in his collar.

"Liberty, my duty was scouting and the incidental picking up of mules, as the records of the War Department will be pleased to exhibit, sir."

After a few minutes' more conversation the Colonel rose. "I will now go back to the ballroom," he declared himself. "Liberty, I came aboard tonight with your third cousin, Miss Lucy Sanders."

"That so? Come down, Marse Drace, and I'll introduce you to her."

"I think, sir, that she has retired," the Colonel was quick to interpose, realizing that he had thoughtlessly suggested an invasion of his own territory.

"Not while there is a fiddle going," said Shottle. "Come on."

Into Virgil's heart flew the hope that the slave's cousin might be the barbaric girl with the roses; there could be no mistaking her, after meeting her, for in that brief gaze he had carried away a master's painting of her, easeled in his mind. So he was quick to hasten below with Shottle, the Colonel panting behind them.

Miss Lucy had just left off dancing. No, she was not the thrilling barbarian, but Drace swallowed his disappointment dry, like a swamp man taking quinine. Shottle might have reflected that never before had his kinswoman been so glad to see him. On his arm she hung as she cooed, but her eyes were on Drace, and he listened, not to her words, but to the music of her accent, soft as the notes of a dove. Like a frost-bitten Shanghai, the Colonel stood first on one foot and then on the other. Drace politely asked Miss Lucy to dance with him, and the Colonel dropped onto a chair. Shottle sat beside him.

"She takes to him like a duck to water," said the slave, looking after his master and his third cousin.

The Colonel sighed. "Liberty Shottle," he said, "I am going to tell you something."

"Out with it."

"It is not a matter to be spoken of so lightly, sir."

"All right; go ahead."

"Liberty Shottle, it is this: I am deeply in love with your cousin, and before the dawn of another day I shall pop the question to her."

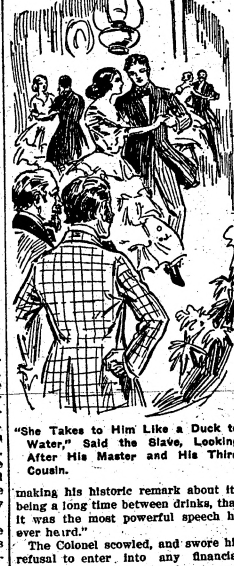
"Pop the deuce! Lend me ten dollars."

"You shock me, sir."

"Tell you what I'll do," persisted Shottle. "Let me have ten, and I'll make her a speech in your favor that will kink her hair."

"Shottle!"

"And I can do it. They've got my speech on the Periclean Age hung up right now at the university. The governor of North Carolina said to the governor of South Carolina, just after making his historic remark about its being a long time between drinks, that it was the most powerful speech he ever heard."



"She Takes to Him Like a Duck to Water," Said the Slave, Looking After His Master and His Third Cousin.

The Colonel scowled, and swore his refusal to enter into any financial transaction involving his heart; and Shottle, realizing that his efforts were vain, sank down into melancholy silence. Miss Lucy, meanwhile, was introducing Drace to some of her friends, not to young women, but to men and to ladies well advanced along the path. Drace soon realized that this society was far from the caricature that Shottle and Colonel Josh might reflect; for the most part it was composed of ladies of exquisite refinement, and men strong in the dignity of medicine or the law.

"You have not chosen an opportune time to visit New Orleans," an old judge remarked to Drace. "We are forced to live under the infamy of a carpetbag government, sir. Political scoundrels, who in the North could never attain to even the meanest office, come down here where we are disfranchised and elect themselves legislators, governors—representatives of parishes that they have never seen. Heavy taxes are levied, and they pocket the money. The governor was not elected, but named by a gang of freebooters. The real citizens of the state have no vote. Their former slaves and the crooks who now manage them control the ballot-box. This is the true state of affairs. Wait till you see New Orleans, sir."

This talk was too serious for Miss Lucy. She plucked Drace away to walk with her, and she hung laughing on his arm as everywhere his eyes searched for the girl with the roses in vain! And presently he excused himself and went disconsolately to bed.

CHAPTER III

Next day the Leona reached New Orleans. To Drace his first look into the countenance of the famous old city was a disappointment; it had not the quick throb; its pulse was slow and rhythmic. The levee was too broad and diffuse to appear active. The buildings looked mean and low. Romance and history had painted for him a picture too lively to color. But soon the charm of this half-lazy delta life began to reveal itself to him. The town was ruled like a true French city, it sang. Paris minuetted in the terror of the Revolution, and her youngest daughter in America, singed with powder, and with bloodstains on her dainty feet, danced to the music of her own improvised gayety. Drace saw the carpetbag governor driving through the street, surrounded by an escort of black and mulatto cavalry. From a balcony came a gunshot, and an enormous negro in white gloves, sitting beside his political master, tumbled out upon the ground but the carriage did not halt in its speed, and the hoofs of the cavalry beat upon the murdered wretch. In a doorway an old man sat fiddling for his grandchildren to dance on the flagstones.

"Oh, you'll find drama enough here that hasn't been rehearsed," said Shottle as they turned toward the old St. Charles.

"They appear to have set the stage for us." Drace answered him, wondering if ever again he should find the girl with the torch of roses.

In connecting rooms and amidst the luxury of old French furnishings they were quartered.

Leaving Drace writing a letter, Shottle went out, but he soon returned with more of light than usually beamed from the sad stretch of his countenance.

"Well, sir," he cried with astonishing enthusiasm, "I want to tell you that life is not composed entirely of ingratitude. Last year when I was down here I saw an old fellow about to get into trouble with a Mexican roustabout on the levee. I wasn't in any particular hurry, so I stopped, took up a piece of scantling and knocked the Mexican down. It was no particular trouble on my part, but the old man took it as a favor and urged me to eat dinner with him, which I did, being broke at the time. Now what does he do? I met him out there, and he gives me two tickets for the French ball at the St. Louis tonight."

"All right; we'll take it in."

"I should say we will! Why, there's likely to be a half dozen duels arranged for. We can see them bursting into bloom. But you'll have to liven up, you know. You are just a trifle stern, it strikes me. There is too much of—of your mission showing in your face. I don't know of anything better calculated to correct it than an hour at the roulette wheel. Suppose we go over and give it a whirl."

"Hope springs infernal in the human breast," Drace paraphrased the poet. "Just as well curb yourself, old fellow. I'm not going to feed your passion."

A tap at the door and Colonel Josh announced himself from the outside. Invited to enter, he came in with a sweeping bow, his beard and mustache waxed, his hair darkened with dye, giving to it a tinge of blue. He bore, and with ceremonious hesitancy, an invitation from Miss Lucy. She was at the delightful old home of a relative where choice guests would assemble that evening to hear Prof. L. Bannock Pettigrew read a paper on the origin and character of the ancient Scythians.

"I'm very sorry, Colonel," Drace cheerfully lied, "but we have another engagement."

The Colonel gleefully replied that he was put into a position of deep regret. He knew that Captain Drace would so much enjoy the professor; his paper would not take up more than three hours of the evening. He would impart to Miss Lucy that Captain Drace found it impossible to come. The Captain assured him that such was the true situation and brightening, the Colonel gladdened himself out of the room.

The ballroom which Drace entered that night was as fantastic as a gypsy's vision. It seemed that all civilization had lifted the lids of its worm-eaten chests to array in whimsic reminder of its former self. There was evident poverty making itself neat in old linen, and war victims proud in threadbare coats. In rags there is history, but no ancestry attached to cloth fresh from the mill. No unfriendly eye was supposed to look upon this gathering, no antagonistic politics permitted to view it. The walls were draped in the colors of France, and enshrined in a corner was a Confederate banner, its staff splintered, its folds darkened with sacred blood.

As Shottle no longer held the hope of raising a speculative table-stake, he bent himself to the less interesting life of the dance. But not without mishap! The floor was smooth with wax from the ends of marriage-altar candles; and Liberty's feet, more accustomed to the rough matting, and ragged carpets of the gambling-room, flew from under him. Catching right and left in his fall, he came down with a bit of lace in one hand and a comb in the other, while women shrieked at the devastations he had wrought, grouping about the severest sufferer to screen her into a retiring-room.

60 LOSE LIVES IN PENN. MINE

Explosion Occurs in Pit Mine Soon After Men Start Work for Day.

BODIES ARE SCATTERED

Exact Number in Mine at Time of Tragedy Is Unknown—31 Rescued From Gas-Filled Mine Are Expected to Recover.

Spangler, Pa.—Between 50 and 60 miners were killed in the Reilly mine of the Reilly Coal company, near here, according to an official estimate made public by rescue workers and company officials.

This estimate was arrived at after rescue workers who had searched the explosion-wrecked mine for many hours reported they believed there were no more survivors in the workings.

31 Are Rescued.

Officials of the company are still uncertain as to the exact number of men who went to work just a short time before the blast.

They believe that the total was between 90 to 95.

Rescue men who had attempted to count the bodies they stumbled over declared they counted approximately 50, but said it is probable that a few more men perished in the unexplored chambers.

Rescued Mostly Young.

Thirty-one blanched survivors from the mine—most of them young men—lay on a double row of cots in the miners' hospital here, anxiously watching the entrance to the big room. They were the known survivors of the 94 miners who went into the mine a few minutes before a terrific explosion.

Their vigil began when the first eight were brought to the hospital. The entrance of stretcher bearers meant that another comrade had been dragged from an underground sea of gas.

Blast in Heart of Mine.

At 7:30 o'clock in the morning the explosion occurred in the heart of the mine. As soon as miners from the neighboring pits could reach the mine preliminary work of rescue began, and it was supplemented later in the day by trained engineers from the United States bureau of mines in Pittsburgh, and the rescue crews of neighboring mines.

The rescue men all told the same story as they came to the surface. They declared that bodies were scattered through the working for more than 500 feet.

"The sad part of it," said one sturdy miner, "is that at least 20 of the victims were within 100 feet of fresh air when they were overcome by the gas."

Kin Throng Scene.

Men, women and children by the score crowded the police lines near the shaft. Many of them had been there since they heard the explosion early in the day, and there was no indication they would leave their post until the last body had been brought out.

"On the cot of honor" at the hospital rests a youth of 22. His name is Abe Craig. His coolness saved at least a dozen lives.

ALLIES WANT TURK RESPECT

Paris—The French and British governments, in full accord, will insist that the Angora government respect the terms of the Mudania armistice, and instructions to the high commissioners in Constantinople have been drawn up in that spirit.

It is expected in French circles that the Angora authorities will accept the viewpoint of the allies.

This expectation was based upon the fact that the Turks, through excessive exactions, would risk the cooling of friendships that would be most valuable to them at Lausanne and, after Lausanne, when Turkey faces financial problems.

It is thought possible that a compromise may be effected under which the Kemalists would be allowed to send functionaries to Constantinople and perhaps some gendarmes to maintain order in the Turkish quarter.

Can't Send in Troops.

The allies, however, will refuse all requests of the Turks to send troops before the signing of peace.

Premier Poincare and Lord Curzon, the British foreign secretary, are exchanging views with regard to the Angora note respecting foreign warships and the railroads, and probably will agree upon an early reply.

MacSwiney's Sister Hunger Strikes.

Dublin—A bulletin issued by the Republicans states that Miss Mary MacSwiney, who was arrested by the Free State military, has been hunger-striking since she was taken into custody. A letter said to have been found after her arrest reads: "If imprisoned, I will hunger strike. I don't know whether they will let me die, but if they do, pray for me that I may be brave as those who have gone before me." Mary MacSwiney is a sister of the late Terrence MacSwiney, lord mayor of Cork.

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Luverne—Burglars entered the State Bank of Steen through a window, blew open the vault and looted the safety deposit boxes.

Worthington—Samuel Shell, Worthington, former state representative and senator, died at his home here. Mr. Shell, who was more than 70 years old, had been ill for several months.

Hibbing—It is not difficult to obtain radio messages on the iron range according to Ralph English, who was sent to the iron range by a twin city radio company when it was reported that messages could not be received here as easily as in other parts of the country.

International Falls—Lumbering operations in Minnesota and Wisconsin have resulted in a heavy demand for experienced men, J. D. Williams, member of the state industrial commission, says. Reports filed with the commission showed that 1,810 men and women were placed in October.

St. Paul—With the approach of the legislative session in January, removal of several state departments from the capitol to office buildings downtown is in progress. The state securities commission offices moved to 920 Guardian Life Building, St. Paul.

Deer River—Cyrus Murdock King, aged 62, lifelong democrat, one of the leaders in the development of northern Minnesota, died at his home here. He was the father of Stafford H. King, state adjutant of the American Legion.

Owatonna—Major E. C. Clemans, veteran of two wars and pastor of the First Methodist church of this city, was elected chairman of the Steele county chapter, American Red Cross, at its annual meeting here. He was also elected director of the sixth roll-call.

Windom—Citizens of Windom will have a special ballot to vote at the election on which they will be asked to give the city council the authority to purchase for $15,000 the waterpower rights on the Des Moines river at this point. It is proposed to establish a hydro plant to be operated in conjunction with a steam plant for furnishing electricity.

Austin—White Leghorn pullets from the Brookholm Farms, near here, will be used to establish a flock for the university farms at Morris. A representative of the state university was here to inspect poultry for the new university farm.

Duluth—Following an executive session, the board of St. Louis county commissioners reached a "gentleman's agreement" whereby the 1923 county tax rate will be increased about one mill.

Hibbing—A case in court here is of interest not alone to the village of Hibbing, but to the state at large, since on its results hinges an interpretation never before sought of the state veterans' preferment act. The case was filed in district court on behalf of Lester Atkinson, former weighmaster of the village, who was summarily dismissed last August. The village of Hibbing is made defendant and Atkinson claims $600 back salary on the ground he is still legally an employe of the village.

Red Wing—The fire department has raised funds to install a radio apparatus at central station, and special arrangements will be made to accommodate a large number of people at one time. "We want it understood," Chief Gross said, "that men, women and children of Red Wing will be welcome to 'listen in' at central station at all times."

Duluth—Increases in salary, retroactive to Oct. 1, and affecting about 12,000 employees of the Oliver Iron Mining company, were announced by Pentecost Mitchell, vicepresident of the corporation.

Minneapolis—With the appointment of a commission to appraise the land and assess the cost, the acquisition of Rice lake and the lands along Minnehaha creek from the lake to the falls for park purposes, is under way. This includes about 200 acres and cost of acquisition will be $250,000. The entire project, including the improvements will cost $1,000,000.

Duluth—Plans for a new $1,000,000 city hall are now in the hands of architects. Details of the new structure will be referred to the people of the city for suggestions.

Minneapolis—Munsingwear corporation is negotiating for the purchase of Wayne Knitting mills and the Thieme Brothers company silk mills of Fort Wayne, Ind., according to reports.

Appleton—The 12th annual Minnesota meeting of the Yellowstone Trail association was conducted here. This is the seventh in a series of 14 state conventions. Henry Orme of St. Paul, Minnesota member of the national executive committee for 1922 presided.

Hibbing—Canadian whisky is being brought into northern Minnesota by airplane and distributed to the numerous cities by automobile, according to Judge Thomas F. Brady. Police officials of several range towns have combined their efforts to halt the flood of illicit liquor into this district.

Minneapolis—The University farm school, department of botany, has been appointed an experiment station for the National Gladieli society, and some interesting exhibits will be entered from the department in the Twin City Flower show at the Kenwood Armory, Nov. 11 to 16.

Births and Deaths in England.

The report of the registrar general for England and Wales for 1920, just issued, shows the highest marriage rate yet recorded—20.2 per one thousand of population; the highest birth rate since 1900—25.5 per one thousand; and the highest natural increase by births over deaths of any period ever recorded in the history of the country. England and Wales added almost 500,000 to their population by natural increase during this year. The number of deaths was the lowest since 1862, when the population was half that of 1920.—The Living Age.

American Miners Outdig Russians.

American coal miners, thrown out of work by the five months' strike in the United States, have been drifting into the pits of the Donetz basin in Russia.

The Bolshevik government at Moscow announced the other day that 32 Americans in the Yusowiki mine had established a record by digging in one day two and one-half times as much coal as did the same number of Russian miners. It is understood that more American miners are on their way to Russia.

Our Patriots.

Senator Lodge of Massachusetts was discussing office seekers. "They are the bane of a legislator's existence," he cried, adding, "and most of them seem to think that government positions are nothing but graft. It never seems to occur to them that it takes able workers to carry on the machinery of the greatest government in the world.

"Why, the other day, in talking to a candidate for a really important position requiring a good all-round education, I discovered that the fellow actually thought that South Bend was a morning exercise."

Rare Find in English Church.

After three centuries of concealment behind plaster and rubbish, the remains of a Fourteenth century stained-glass window have been discovered at Chelsea (England) Old church. The old glass, which is of immense value, was found between layers of soft plaster behind a mass of old bricks. In one window only a fragment of a border was found, but in the other a panel two feet by two was brought to light. The panel is nearly complete, the head of the figure—apparently that of St. Lawrence or St. Stephen—is missing. The glass seems to be of a date not later than the middle of the Fourteenth century. With the exception of Westminster abbey, there is no London church with its own glass of so early a date.

Truly an Optimist.

He was an optimist, and had just moved into new lodgings with his wife.

On the north of them dwelt a gas company. Chemicals were made in the east. A glue factory perfumed the south. The west wafted weird soap-boiling effluvia. But, bless you, he was an optimist!

"Of course, dear," he murmured, holding his nose, "it is a little trying sometimes. Still there's an advantage in the arrangement. At least, we don't need to buy a weathercock to tell the way the wind is blowing."—London Tit-Bits.

New Book Ends Invented.

Because book ends relying on their weight have a tendency to slide apart on smooth tables an inventor has patented a pair mounted on rollers and held together with a spring to keep them against books between them.

On the Anxious Seat.

At the Brightwood branch library one little girl was much interested in the book-reading contest. However, she wasn't interested to the extent that she would make the effort to read the ten books necessary to receive a diploma.

After the contest was closed and the winners had received their diplomas, she remarked, "If there are any diplomas left, I believe I will take one."—Indianapolis News.

Are you among these thousands?

THOUSANDS of people keep on trying, year after year, to build health from food that has been robbed of certain elements required for perfect nutrition.

If your food doesn't contain the mineral properties that go to build up nerve, tooth and bone structure, there is no other means by which you can get these vital elements.

This is one reason why so many well-informed people eat Grape-Nuts—the food that enriches the blood, and builds sound, healthy bodies.

Grape-Nuts is made from whole wheat flour and malted barley—baked for 20 hours, which develops the natural richness of the grains and makes for ready digestibility.

And Grape-Nuts is perfectly delicious—served with milk or cream, or made into an appetizing pudding for dinner.

Get a package of Grape-Nuts from your grocer today, and give the family a help to health.

MERCHANT SHIPS VITAL AS AIDS TO OUR NAVY

By
COL. THEODORE ROOSEVELT,
Assistant Secretary of the Navy

© HARRIS & EWING

THE United States is a world power. Her commerce is spread over the Seven Seas. The prosperity of her people depends upon her exports and imports. By no stretch of the imagination can she be said to have a closed cycle of trade. For a country doing the business that our country does, for a country the prosperity of whose people depends on such business, it is a most dangerous thing to have our carrying trade handled by foreign bottoms.

We always speak of our independence. There is but one way we can be properly independent, and that is to be self-sufficient. We cannot be self-sufficient unless we have a merchant marine of our own. We cannot have a merchant marine of our own unless the present ship subsidy bill, or legislation of like nature, is passed.

Many of our citizens refuse to see this undeniable fact. It is difficult for them to follow the chain of cause and effect which produces it. For example, to a farmer in the wheat fields of Kansas or Iowa, it is difficult to explain the necessity of an American merchant marine. He exports his wheat, however, and our exports depend upon ships. We have not got our own merchant marine. Of a necessity, we have to depend upon the merchant marine of other countries. Should war break—should any stringency arise—this merchant marine would cease to be available, and our isolation would at once follow with its coincident disasters.

These are the general economic facts, but there is still another aspect equally important, and that is the relationship the merchant marine bears to national defense. No real naval power is possible without both a regular Navy and a merchant marine. The two are indissolubly linked and either is crippled without the other.

As the Treaty for Limiting Naval Armaments has been brought to a successful conclusion, the merchant marine has a more important defense factor now than it had a year ago. In all great peace loving countries such as ours, military and naval establishments are maintained on a "peace footing"—that is, they are but skeletons on which are built in time of war the fighting machines. When we entered the World War, we had 64,680 men in our Navy. At the finish, we had 507,000. The personnel of the merchant marine is, therefore, an all-essential naval reserve for the country in war.

Not only does the naval personnel have to be greatly expanded in war, but the same holds true of the vessels. A modern fighting fleet requires a large train of non-combatant ships, ranging from oilers and supply ships to tenders of every variety. The farther the field of operations, the larger becomes this train. To purchase such vessels from other countries in time of war would be costly and difficult. To build them would be very costly and very slow. There is but one source from which they could be obtained promptly and without undue expense, and that is from an American merchant marine.

If we do not pass the ship subsidy bill, our merchant ships will disappear and with them our shipyards. The shipyard cannot be improvised successfully over night.

Much of the world's development has come from the sea. Since time immemorial, since the days of the Phoenician traders—liberal and progressive countries have tended to maritime development. On communication depends our civilization. Unless we build up our merchant marine, we will have eliminated ourselves from communication by water and wilfully discarded part of our birthright.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

Tanlac Put Him Back on Job, Says Davis

"I've never been much of a hand at praising medicines, but I can certainly say something good for Tanlac," said Geo. Davis, 110 Naglee St., San Francisco, Calif.

"I had a bad case of ptomaine poisoning and it came pretty near laying me out altogether. For three months I was in an awful condition and suffering constantly from diarrhea. I became weak all over and was going from bad to worse. I tried everything I knew of, but it was beginning to look like nothing would ever reach my case.

"Then, a friend of mine recommended Tanlac to me. And it's a fact, four bottle have made a clean sweep of my troubles and built me up to where I feel like a new man. I am working every day now and when it comes to recommending Tanlac I can't put it too strong."

"NADINE LA VITTE!"

SYNOPSIS—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace gets his mind off his mission by entering into deck sports in which he exhibits an unusual athletic prowess. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat.

"That's what comes to a horse that wanders from his stable-lot out on the frozen pond," said Shottle as Drace came up to laugh at him.

"You've made a rip in the skirt of the ball sure enough," Drace replied, taking him by the arm. And then suddenly he halted, for he caught sight of a girl coming toward him. A moment before, there had been numerous young women in the room, but now there was only one—the barbaric rose maid, the girl who had touched his heart with a torch.

With her walked a tall, handsome and well-dressed young man. Her hand rested upon his arm, and she seemed to listen with pleasure to his evidently ardent wooing. She looked at Drace, one glance, and then turned her eyes back to her cavalier and passed on. And a flame of jealousy was added to the turmoil that already held possession of him.

"Who is she, Shottle?" demanded Drace.

"I don't know, but I'll find out. Lord, but she is a fetcher."

He moved off, dodging the dancers here and there, while Drace sat alone in a window, waiting.

The orchestra struck up the supper-march, and Shottle, stalking his prey, saw the lady who had so excited Drace's interest seated with her cavalier in an alcove and supping daintily. Possessing himself of a plate and a goodly portion of chicken, Shottle returned and brazenly seated himself near them, listening with all his ears.

"Nadine," the cavalier was saying, "you wrong me in thinking I seek to influence you through my friendship with your father. It is true he owes me much; and it is true that if I were to become a member of his family I would forget that. But I want to make you care for me for myself. If—"

"Hush, Mr. Boyce," said the girl. "There are people near—this is no place to discuss such things."

The young man lowered his voice, and Shottle could hear no more. He calmly finished his chicken and then sought out Drace, whom he found pacing up and down impatiently.

"Well?" demanded Drace.

"His name," announced Shottle, "is Boyce. Frederick Boyce, probably—or maybe John. It would be John, I'd think."

"Hang his name!" exclaimed Drace. "Did you find out hers?"

"Nadine," replied Shottle with a triumphant air.

"Nadine," repeated Drace, and caressed the name with his lips. "But what's her last name?"

"Brown probably, or maybe Jones. Or it might even be Smith."

Drace scowled his wrath at such flippancy. "Look here, Lib," he said. "I'll give you twenty-five dollars to find out her full name and where she lives. I'll give you a hundred if you'll find somebody who'll introduce me to her."

"It's a bet," said Shottle. "But I must warn you you're late. Boyce wants her to marry him, and he's got a hold on her father. But she stood him off."

"H'm—she stood him off? My offer stands, Lib. She couldn't possibly throw herself away on a low-looking fellow like that."

Shottle asked for the twenty-five in advance, was denied and took himself off, grumbling. He found Boyce and the girl called Nadine just leaving the little alcove, and stopped them, bowing low. "Sir," he said, addressing Boyce, "I have been directed to inform this lady that she has been awarded a prize as the best waltzer in the room. If you will be so good as to give me her name and address in order that it may be delivered to her?"

Boyce regarded Shottle suspiciously. "Well!" he exclaimed. "I didn't know they did that sort of thing here. What is the prize and who is giving it?"

"The prize," replied Shottle blandly, "is a—turkey. It is given by the—by a leading butcher of the town."

Boyce laughed, and the girl added her silver merriment. "I'm sure I'm flattered," she said. "The name is Nadine la Vitte, and the address—"

She broke off, and flushed a little. Shottle's jaw had dropped; then he gulped with an extraordinary contortion of his face in the endeavor to mask his astonishment. "And the address?" he pursued.

The girl and Boyce exchanged a troubled look. "I think," interposed Boyce, "it would be better to take the—the fowl home tonight. Perhaps you would be good enough to deliver it to our carriage. It is ordered for one o'clock—Number 297." Bowing with pelican grace, Shottle departed, but he delayed some ten minutes in dark thought before he sought Drace again. For Shottle wanted the hundred dollars, and if he were to tell Drace that her name was La Vitte! Could it be possible that she was Stepho's daughter?

He presented himself before Drace at length. "Master," he announced, "her name is Nadine Brown and her address is Carriage Number 297."

"Carriage Number Two— But that is no address. And—"

"Listen, Master," went on Shottle hurriedly. "I have a scheme—a magnificent scheme. Not only shall you be introduced to this lady, but you shall be presented to her in the role of a protector and rescuer."

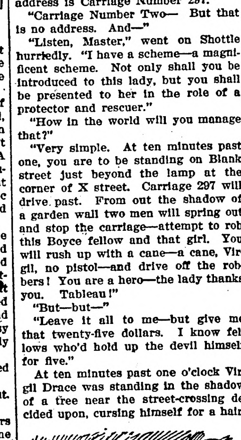
"How in the world will you manage that?"

"Very simple. At ten minutes past one, you are to be standing on Blank street just beyond the lamp at the corner of X street. Carriage 297 will drive past. From out the shadow of a garden wall two men will spring out and stop the carriage—attempt to rob this Boyce fellow and that girl. You will rush up with a cane—a cane, Virgil, no pistol—and drive off the robbers! You are a hero—the lady thanks you. Tableau!"

"But—but—"

"Leave it all to me—but give me that twenty-five dollars. I know fellows who'd hold up the devil himself for five."

At ten minutes past one o'clock Virgil Drace was standing in the shadow of a tree near the street-crossing decided upon, cursing himself for a hair-brained fool and Shottle for an addle-pated rogue. A rattle of wheels came to his ears, and a cab approached him. As it came under the lamp at the corner, Virgil was sure he recognized the flamingo neck of Liberty Shottle rising from the turned-up collar of the cabby on the box.



Possessing Himself of a Plate and a Goodly Portion of Chicken, Shottle Returned and Brazenly Seated Himself Near Them.

The cab passed him. And then from the shadow of a wall a hundred yards or so distant two dark figures darted out. There came a hoarse command, a stifled scream, a cry for help. Drace ran forward and found Boyce, Nadine and the supposed cabman standing with uplifted hands beside the vehicle while a masked desperado threatened them with a pistol and a second robber demanded their valuables.

Now Drace played his part right gallantly, rushing upon the robbers with uplifted cane. The fellow with the pistol fired once—then a blow on the wrist from Drace's stick sent the weapon flying. The pain of the blow enraged the fellow, however, and as Drace made at the second robber, the first one struck him heavily, momentarily dazing him. The two supposed robbers now took to their heels, pursued half-heartedly by Cabman Shottle and energetically by Boyce, who had been robbed in good earnest. And to complete the melee, the poor cab-horse, frightened by the pistol shot, galloped off with the ramshackle vehicle lurching behind it.

Nadine turned to Drace, her face lighted with gratitude. She held forth her hand. With a grace that would not have mocked a Highlander who, schooled in France, had followed home the Queen of Scots, he bent over it and reverently touched it with his lips. Wild was her nature, this half-barbaric maid, and she snatched her hand away, but repenting instantly, smiled and spoke.

"I thank you much. You are brave. You are like one on the stage, the hero."

Her words came freely, and with just enough of accent to convince that they were sweeter than if there were none. Drace asked her if she remembered him, and her black velvet eyes flashed dark in astonishment.

"How could I when never have I seen you? You must mistake me. No."

"I saw you on the boat, at the ball at the St. Louis," Drace said. "But come to think of it, I know that it would be vanity on my part to believe that you have seen me."

"No, it would not be vanity," pleasantly she contradicted him, shaking her head, her cloud of hair. "The brave do not be vain, but I did not see you. I am so sorry. You sorry, too, ha?"

She laughed, and Drace thought that never till that moment had he heard music in its sweetest purity. Then Boyce and Shottle returned, panting—Shottle to disappear again in pursuit of his vanished vehicle.

"Sir, I thank you most heartily for your assistance," said Boyce, grasping Drace's hand. "My name is Boyce—Rupert Boyce. May I—"

"Mine, sir, is Virgil Drace," responded that young man. "I am only too glad to have been of help. I'm afraid, however, you'll have to finish your journey on foot. May I have the pleasure of walking with you?"

This suggestion, however, Boyce declined. And although Drace insisted as far as the bounds of courtesy would permit, both Boyce and the girl evaded consent. And they left him standing thunderstruck on the street corner—for the girl had said, giving him her hand again in parting: "I thank you once more for your help, Mr. Drace. I hope I may see you again some time. My name is Nadine la Vitte, and I am often in New Orleans."

Drace passed an uneasy night, his mind torn by his suspicion that Nadine la Vitte was the daughter of old Stepho. And when Liberty came to his room next morning, eager for praise and reward, the truth came out. Nadine was indeed the daughter of old Stepho; Liberty had overheard enough while disguised as the cabman to confirm that. But where she lived in New Orleans, Liberty had failed to learn; he had planned to drive them home, but the runaway of the cab horse had sent that plan agley.

CHAPTER IV

Now more than ever was Drace resolved to find where the girl lived, to find old Stepho, to— What would he do when he found them? He was bent on revenge upon his father's murderers, on solving the secret of that buried money; yet he was in love with that arch-scoundrel's daughter. Or was he? He must find her, make sure. And he said as much to Shottle.

"There are some things that can't be done by mere determination," said Shottle, his mind on filling a flush.

"No, but judgment ought to be the master and director of determination. I tell you what we'll do. This afternoon we'll take the French quarter by streets and knock at every door."

That afternoon they set out on their quest. But the scheme of knocking at every door soon seemed foolish and impertinent. They decided to halt only in front of habitations that seemed to invite inquiry, consult their instinct; but as repeated failure blunts instinct dull, hope became a critic, without creative adventure, and advised a return to the hotel. Then they thought that night would be a fitter time. They might catch sight of the girl or Boyce at the theater.

"I am Colonel Shottle, sir, and not Lib!"

Curious Rays.

It was Blondlot, a French chemist, who discovered a new set of radiations emitted by a Roentgen tube, differing from the X-rays, in that they can be concentrated by means of a quartz lens, and can also be reflected. The X-rays undergo neither reflection nor refraction. The rays first mentioned pass through aluminum, paper and wood, being rectilinearly polarized on their emission. They are susceptible of both rotary and elliptical polarization. But they produce neither fluorescence nor photographic action.

Perfume Took Name From City.

The original recipe for the famous perfume, eau-de-Cologne, was discovered by an Italian living in Cologne in 1709.

SHIPSTEAD LEAD CLOSE TO 90,000

Late Returns Bring No Changes in Announced Results.

STATE TICKET G. O. P.

Governor Preus and Running Mates on Republican Ticket Win By Safe Majorities—Frazier Wins.

Minneapolis—Returns from the election of November 7th continued to come in slowly from the scattered precincts throughout the state.

Dr. Henrik Shipstead continued to increase his lead over Frank B. Kellogg and Anna Dickie Olesen as the scattering returns were received, and will have close to 90,000 plurality when the total vote is tabulated.

Governor Preus and the balance of the Republican state ticket won by majorities of various sizes, the Preus vote being considerable under several of the other candidates on the ticket.

For Supreme Court Justice, James H. Quinn now has a safe lead over Wm. A. Anderson.

For United States senator, 3,394 precincts out of 3,479, give Kellogg 238,787, Shipstead 320,713, Olesen 121,910.

AMENDMENTS BOTH ADOPTED

Legislature Will Have Ready-Made Program to Start Work On.

Minneapolis—Adoption of the two constitutional amendments submitted to Minnesota voters was made sure by returns compiled so far, covering 2,316 of the state's 3,479 precincts. No. 1, the rural credits amendment, already has more votes than necessary to pass. No. 2, the ore tax amendment, needs only a few thousand votes, which it will get from more than a thousand precincts still to be heard from.

Success of the two amendments provides a ready made program of work for the next legislature. Proposals will be put before the two houses early in January for the following legislation:

> Creation of a state rural credits system, with authority to issue state bonds which will provide funds to make loans on farm lands within the state. Annual payments of interest and instalments on the principal will about equal the usual interest charge, it is planned, and will repay the entire loan by the amortization plan in 30 to 40 years.
>
> Apportionment of the iron ore tonnage tax according to terms of Amendment No. 2, recognizing the "heritage" feature of the tax. One-half the proceeds of the tax will be available for current expenses, 40 per cent will go to the permanent school fund, and 10 per cent to the permanent university fund.

Amendment No. 2 was submitted mainly to cure any defect which the courts might find in tonnage tax law.

FRAZIER NEW N. D. SENATOR

Will Have Majority More Than 8,000 Over J. F. T. O'Connor.

Fargo—Returns from 2,032 of the state 2,138 precincts give Lynn J. Frazier, Nonpartisan league candidate for United States senator a lead over J. F. T. O'Connor, democrat anti-league, of 7,366. The count now stands: Frazier, 98,617; O'Connor, 91,251.

Governor Nestos is re-elected over William Lemke by a big majority, while the Independents win practically all of the state offices. The Nonpartisans elected the State Auditor, three members of the Railroad and Warehouse Commission and Insurance Commissioner. The Independents gain control of the Supreme Court by the election of three of their endorsed candidates.

STATE BANK IS VOTED DOWN

South Dakota Electors Refuse to Approve of State Owned Utilities.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—Apparently fearing an increase in state taxes, South Dakota electors voted down the proposals to build a state owned hydroelectric power plant and to establish a state owned bank. It was pointed out that the former proposal entailed an appropriation of $2,200,000 and the latter an appropriation of $2,000,000

Mrs. Mary Ross

Minneapolis, Minn.—"When my children were small I had a sick spell that weakened me so I could not walk across the floor without the aid of a chair. Our druggist advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and Golden Medical Discovery, alternately, according to directions, and six bottles completely restored me to health and strength. FITTED CORSAGE IS COMING Accessory Promises to Find Favor With the Very Wide Skirts, Fashion Writer Says.

Undoubtedly the fitted corsage is creeping in. Just at present it seems like a casaquin blouse, a size too small; but the intention of the future is that we shall have fitted corsages with very wide skirts, says a fashion writer in the Boston Globe. Poiret has been showing models of this kind for some months past, Lanvin also, and other famous dressmakers, though in the latter case the models are almost always for evening use. If you happen to be abnormally tall and slender, you can be as exaggeratedly Moyen Age as you please, but this style demands considerable thought and intelligence, if one is not to look ridiculous.

Though the uneven hem is still in view, and at best places, there are signs which indicate that women of good taste are growing tired of it. This is easy to understand, because all the best models of this order have been copied by small dressmakers, without the least difficulty. It is the easiest thing in the world to arrange drooping panels, or long lengths of ribbon which produce a more or less successful "uneven hem." The least experienced amateur can achieve good results in this line, and so the big dressmakers are going to give us something newer and more complicated.

The present craze for plaited dresses has much to do with the declining popularity of the fashion in question. There are few things less attractive than a plaited skirt which does not "hang straight," all around.

When Sewing Lace.

Never make a seam in joining lace. Whip over and over or else buttonhole together with buttonhole stitches. Endeavor to join on the edge of a design so as to hide the joining place.

White Frocks.

White dresses are now in vogue in Paris, in contrast to the black crepe garments which have so long been popular. Frequently they are beaded with crystal beads and paneled and plaited.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

St. Paul—A new strain of sugar cane that will yield increases over old varieties has been developed by Dr. J. J. Williams of the state farm of the University of Minnesota.

Minneapolis—Employes of the Minneapolis office of the United States Veterans Bureau No. 1, organized a United States Veterans' bureau employes' savings and loan fund at a meeting of the organization here.

Minneapolis—Dr. Henrik Shipstead spent $1,201.95 in his campaign for United States senator, including $300 spent for an automobile, he reported in his expenditure statement to the secretary of the senate at Washington.

Moorhead—Steps will be taken by both the Great Northern and Northern Pacific companies to install safety apparatus at all crossings in Moorhead and the speed of all trains passing through will be limited to six miles an hour representatives of the companies told the city council at a meeting here.

Duluth—With the close of navigation one month away, the total receipts of coal at the Duluth and Superior docks for the season up to Nov. 1, aggregate approximately one-third the tonnage received during 1921.

New Richland—The congregation of Trinity Lutheran church here, has decided to erect a new edifice next spring. $35,000 has been pledged. The new church, to have a seating capacity of 500, will cost $40,000.

Glencoe—The McLeod county rural teachers will meet in their annual teachers' institute at Glencoe the week ending November 18th. More than one hundred teachers are expected.

Walker—The proposal to divide Cass county has been defeated, according to information received by the county auditor here. The vote against the division is running two to one over that for division.

Waterville—Officers named for the 1923 organization of the Waterville street fair include J. L. Ebling, president; Charles E. Lawald, vice president; A. F. Kohlzer, secretary; William Warburton, treasurer.

Minneapolis—Purchase of the stock of two Fort Wayne, Ind., mills by the Munsingwear corporation of Minneapolis has been abandoned, it was announced by Theodore Thieme of Fort Wayne, an official of the Indiana companies.

Bemidji—A new county in Minnesota—to be known as Lake of the Woods—will be created as soon as the Beltrami county canvassing board makes a report to Governor Preus. Voters of Beltrami county voted to split the county, the proposal carrying by a majority of approximately 200 votes.

Minneapolis—The Minnesota College of Agriculture will send a potato and apple judging team to the Midwest Horticultural Exposition at Council Bluffs, Iowa, the week ending November 18. This announcement was made by Prof. W. G. Brierley, who has been coaching the men on apple judging while Prof. F. A. Krantz has been teaching potato judging.

Crookston—Crookston claims the largest family in Minnesota. Mr. and Mrs. Christian J. Van Oostbree became the parents of their twentieth child. The family moved here from Amsterdam, Holland. Father is 62 years old and the mother 42.

Faribault—Friday was Faribault's day to celebrate. The American Legion and the citizens of Faribault joined to celebrate the end of the World war and the completion of the great paved highway that links the southern part of the state with the Twin Cities and the Thousand Lakes of the North.

Minneapolis—The largest September freight movement in and out of Minneapolis since 1916 is revealed in a summary of figures for October. Only the heavy grain movement of 1916 and 1916 enable those years to show a greater September volume than 1922. A total of 37,193 loaded freight cars were received in Minneapolis this September and a total of 29,536 were forwarded from Minneapolis.

Bemidji—Francis Rhea, star end and a "triple threat" man on the Bemidji high school eleven, broke the second finger of his left hand and will be lost to the Navy Blue and White squad for the balance of the season.

Fairmont—More than 400 per cent gross on an investment of $340 has proved to Cal Crissinger, of Manyaska township, that there is money in raising sheep. In the fall of 1921 Crissinger bought a carload of ewes for $340. From this bunch he sold $225 worth of wool, and in October this year sold with their lambs all but 20, which he kept for breeding ewes. He received $1,447 for the sheep, and has the basis of a good flock left.

St. Paul—The public of Minnesota is urged to support and co-operate in the American Red Cross annual roll call and drive from November 11 to 30, in a proclamation issued by Governor Preus. "An effort is being made to enlist 6,000,000 men and women in the nation and Minnesota is asked to enroll 135,000," the Governor said.

Duluth—Grain receipts at Duluth and Superior elevators for October aggregated 16,474,298 bushels, as compared with 13,977,607 the same month last year. This was a falling off of more than 9,000,000 bushels from the record figures of September this year

PRESCRIPTION FOR LONG LIFE

According to This German Physician, It Is Easy to Add to One's Years of Usefulness.

The gathering of centenarians which took place the other day recalled the case of the eminent German physician, Doctor Fischweiler, who died recently at the age of one hundred and nine. He often declared that he possessed an infallible rule for securing longevity, which he would reveal to the world in his will. Upon his death, then, this formula was disclosed:

"Put your bed, orienting it by means of a compass, so that you will have your head placed north, and lie in a horizontal position. Sleep solidly with closed fists."

This is the whole secret. This position, it is asserted, brings the body in communication with the great tellurian currents coming from the north and insures an extremely happy blood circulation.

Poor Business Proposition.

For real good advice to younger business men I think the following letter that was sent me the other day is the best that could be offered: "A man who would be successful in business must ever treat the public as his friend. He must ever strive to give honest values and be courteous to prospective patrons. Another point that should be carefully considered is the folly of trying to belittle a competitor. To knock a man engaged in the same line of business as yours creates in the mind of the customer a doubt as to the excellence of your own wares and arouses a feeling of sympathy for the man who is not there to defend himself against your charges."—Exchange.

He Had to Stand It.

Yesterday while I was seasick it seemed to me I couldn't stand six days more of it or any more of it. Which reminded me of a remark I once heard a very old man make. He was ill and was telling me of his troubles. Without thinking I said: "I don't see how you stand it." The old man thought a while and then replied feebly: "I have to stand it!" There are many disagreeable things we can't get away from; we are compelled to stand them.—E. W. Howe, in "Daily Notes of a Trip Around the World."

The man who minds his own business is well employed.

ANYTHING TO BE OBLIGING

Little Thing Like That Mentioned Was Nothing to This Applicant for American Citizenship.

At each hearing where applications of foreign-born persons seeking citizenship in the United States are considered and passed on, incidents come up which add humor to the otherwise serious process. At a recent hearing before Judge W. W. Thornton of the Superior court, Room 1, George Mackay, United States naturalization officer, was quizzing an applicant regarding his knowledge of the inner workings of the government and regarding the history of the United States.

"Who was the first President of the United States?" he asked.

"Washington, D. C.," replied the anxious applicant.

"Just leave off the D. C.," said Mr. Mackay.

"Oh, I don't care," said the applicant nonchalantly, with an accompanying gesture of his hand. — Washington Star.

Not for Discussion

"I understand your campaign fund is quite large."

"Let's change the subject," interrupted Senator Sorghum. "It isn't large enough to be worth mentioning."

At the Opera

Alice—"Gladys isn't saying a word to her escort." Virginia—"I do believe she came to hear the music."

Country Signs.

The Woman was driving in the north woods and so charmed was she with the views, the glimpses of silver lakes, the rugged hills, the woods, that for quite a while she forgot about time, and a definite appointment, relates the Chicago Journal. Suddenly, however, she remembered she was due at a certain place at 1:30.

They had told her that it was a straight road for nine or ten miles, and then the road forked, and then—But the rest of the directions the Woman had forgotten. Was she to take the road to the right or the left? But surely there'll be a signboard at the forks, she thought, and that would tell her what to do.

And when she got to the forks there was the signboard, and in straggly black letters it announced: "Either Road."

Red Has-Beens.

Representative Bok of Texas said at a banquet in Washington:

"Our Reds find their audiences less and less sympathetic as Russia totters more and more.

"A Red was orating on a soap box the other day.

"'Yes,' he snarled, 'you're afraid to revolt. You're like the prodigal son. All you get to eat is the husks the swine won't touch, but pretty soon the husks will all be gone. What'll you do then?'

"'Why, eat the swine, of course!' said a young man in blue overalls."

Suspicions which may be unjust need not be stated.

Do you hear the clock strike the night hours?

H[illegible] you have heard people say [illegible] it keeps me awake nights!" They've learned from experience; have you?

If you are a coffee drinker and fail to get sound restful sleep, it means that your nerves are over-stimulated and that health needs protection from coffee's drug, caffeine.

There's no sacrifice in making health safe, as so many thousands have found who have turned from coffee to Postum. It has a delightful coffee-like flavor, and is free from any element that can harm you. As many cups as you like, and no regrets.

Your grocer has Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

Postum is equally delicious; and the cost is only about [illegible]c per cup.

The Zion Ladies' Aid will have their Auction sale at O. M. Larson's in East Valley on Dec. 1st. at 11 o'clock. Hot lunch will be served. Everybody welcome.

We publish the first report this week for the Marshall County State Bank. As the bank had been in operation only four days when the report was made we think they have had a splendid business to commence with.

The creamery will not be closed on Thanksgiving Day on account of the great number of farmers who are expected here that day to attend the church dinner and sale, as it will be much more convenient for them to bring their cream at that time.

Hardy Bjerk, Marvin Sandberg and Loyd Knutson arrived here Sunday from Mahnomen with the work horses of Nohre & Reierson, 22 head in all, and took them out to O. H. Nohre's farm. Mr. Nohre came last week and built sheds to keep their horses in during the winter months.

Clarence Erickson of Jackson, Minn., arrived in Holt Tuesday to assist Robert J. Lund in the Marshall County State Bank. Mr. Erickson has had three years banking experience at Jackon and comes here well recommended. He is 27 years old and is married. Mrs. Erickson will join her husband here as soon as he can find a house, which are rather scarce at present.

New subscribers get this paper a year and five magazines for the year of 1923, all for only $1.55.

Death of Johnny Sollom

Johnny Sollom died early Saturday morning at the home of his brother, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Sollom in Thief River Falls. Mrs. Sollom and daughter, Myrtle, and the formers sister, Mrs. Nelson, of Grand Forks, besides Mrs. Alfred Sollom were at his bedside when death came to relieve him of his long sickness. Only a few hours before his death it was noticed that he was breathing harder, and the brothers and sisters were sent for, but he died about an hour before their arrival.

Johnny Sollom was born March 15th. 1907, on the farm of his parents, a few miles west of Holt.

He was taken sick along about the time of his 15th. birthday. His disease seemed to baffle medical skill and science and the loving care of a devoted mother, sisters and brothers.

The funeral services were held at the Mission church in Holt, Wednesday afternoon, Revs. Myhrer, Strom, and Sande officiating, and the interment was made in the Holt cemmetery beside his father.

The relatives and friends brot many beautiful flowers and floral emblems for the funeral, as a token of love, sympathy and respect for the manly boy who was beloved by everyone.

Relatives and friends present at the funeral from a distance, besides those living in Middle River and Holt, were: Theodore Sollom of Grand Forks, Kittle of Fertile, Miss Olava, who teaches at Angus, Alfred Sollom and family, P. P. Reierson and family, Tilford Reierson, Mrs. Lufkin, Mrs. Fossum, and Ole Moen, all of Thief River Falls, Ole Sollom and Mrs. Nelson of Grand Forks, and Mrs. Poppenhagen of Goodridge.

The News extends deepest sympathy to the sorrowing mother, sisters and brothers of the one who was called to his Heavenly Home so early in life.

Dearest Johnny, thou hast left us,
And our loss we deeply feel,
But 'tis God that has bereft us,
He can all our sorrows heal.
Yet again we hope to meet thee,
When the day of life is fled,
When in Heaven in joy to greet thee
Where no farewell tear is shed.

Take the Sting Out of Winter

The owner of this house set out to spend a comfortable winter. He equipped the windows with storm sash upstairs and down.

Storm windows shut out those piercing drafts that work into the house around every window. The rooms can be kept at an even temperature. And the furnace doesn't have to work overtime, either.

The modern, economical hardware for hanging storm sash is a great convenience. You can adjust them from the inside at varying angles, thus giving proper ventilation to sleeping rooms or any other rooms. See how this is done in the picture.

This is the best time to equip your house with storm windows and storm doors. You'll be surprised to learn how little it costs.

We'll be glad to give you an estimate. It's no obligation.

AILING WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Linton Tells How Helpful Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is at This Period

Denver, Colorado.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for seven years and I cannot tell you the good it has done me. It is good for young and old and I always keep a bottle of it in the house, for I am at that time of life when it calls for Lydia E. Pinkham's help. My husband saw your ad. in the papers and said 'You have taken everything you can think of, now I want you to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound!' So I let him get it, and I soon felt better and he told me 'I want you to take about six bottles.' So I did and I keep house and do all my own work and work out by the day and feel fine now. I tell every one about the Vegetable Compound, for so many of my friends thought I would not get well."—Mrs. R. J. Linton, 1850 West 33d Avenue, Denver, Colorado.

After reading letters like the above, and we are constantly publishing them, why should any woman hesitate to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound if she is in need of help? It brings relief where other medicines fail.

Men Are Like That.

My husband and I, while dining at a cafe, saw a young woman acquaintance who is not only extremely homely, but who has unattractive manners. We discussed her quietly.

Later we went to call on a distant relative of this girl, and I mentioned that we had seen her at dinner. The girl was not a favorite with my hostess and both of us proceeded to enumerate her shortcomings. My husband is deaf and had been paying no attention to our gossip.

Suddenly he turned to our hostess and said: "We just met Marian, and my wife declares she looks and acts enough like you to be your daughter."

You can imagine what I said to him later.—Exchange.

A RIOT.

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho.

They went to one, and from a stage box gazed through rented glasses at every face. Not there. They went out, walked a short distance, talking not of disappointment but of hope, and turned into a narrow and dimly lighted street. Suddenly there broke the noise of a rising tumult, yells and gunshots. And over walls and from dark recesses came pouring excited men. Drace and Shottle found themselves in the midst of a mob, surging toward another mob rushing into an open space where torches discovered a band of executioners hanging some poor wretch to the limb of a tree. Where there were no houses, the garden walls were too high to offer a means of escape, and as they could not fight their way back, Drace and Shottle were swept onward. Torches flared, and all sorts of weapons were revealed in the pitiful yellow light—old muskets, swords, pistols with brass barrels from ancient Spanish armories, clubs and pikes that might have served Cromwell. Some of the men looked respectable, others desperate; they were of many nationalities, all anger-smitten and excited.

"What's it all about?" Drace inquired of a bare-headed old man who panted beside him.

"The carpet-bag devils. They hang a citizen."

"We are on the right side, anyway," Shottle cried. "Give me a gun—give me something."

Some one gave him an old carbine, and another gave Drace a cavalry saber. The man from the North grasped it, feeling that he was to fight the scoundrels that cast discredit and reproach upon his native state.

At this time of man's madness nature could not restrain the introduction of her own grim humor. Dogs gathered in the open space between the bands of advancing rioters, and fought, howling, the victims of wounds without cause.

Not many shots were fired. The authorities made a criminal of the citizen who carried a gun or concealed it in his house. It was a hand-to-hand strife, the breaking of heads, the cutting of throats. A big, red-shirted negro with razor gleaming in the smoky light made a grab at Drace, who had just room enough to leap back and strike with his saber; but the agile negro dodged, the blow was caught by a brick wall and the blade was broken off at the handle. But with the hilt, a boxing glove of steel, Drace knocked the negro down and then passed over his body, striking right and left, pushing onward to the front, where the jagged ranks saw-toothed one into the other.

The struggle now was to save the hanging man, who, without fall enough to break his neck, was strung up to strangle. Drace was the first man to fight his way to him. He dropped his steel boxing glove, grabbed out his knife, leaped up, caught hold of the limb of the tree with one hand and cut the man down.

Catching up his weapon, he was about to mix in the fight again when the sharp scream of a woman caught and held him for a moment. He glanced hurriedly about; at various windows were lights and silhouetted figures of onlookers. But as if drawn by some lodestone instinct his eyes went to a second-story window just beyond the tree; and there, in the strong light of a lamp just behind her, he saw again the face of the barbaric rose maid, Nadine la Vitte.

Instantly he whirled and strove to fight his way to a gate which he saw in the wall before the house. But now came a new cry and a scramble for safety. A troop of United States cavalry came sweeping the thoroughfare from curb to curb, their drawn sabers flashing, the aroused anger of Uncle Sam rebuking a riot. Not to run was to be trampled to death, but Drace stood an instant to look about for Shottle. He could not find him, however, and he had to seek his own safety, for the cavalry were near, spreading out upon the sidewalk.

With divers others, he stood not upon the order of his going but ran back down the street and then hurried down a side street out of the path of the troopers. There he waited until the tumult had subsided—perhaps an hour. Then he made his way back to the scene of the riot.

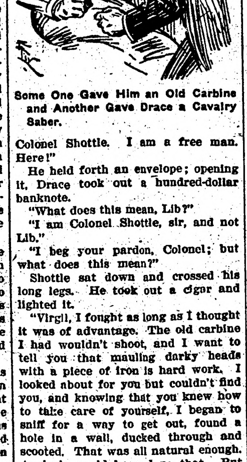
The house at the window of which he thought he had glimpsed the face of Nadine la Vitte was now dark. But in spite of the curious glances of sundry loiterers, Drace took a careful survey of it and of the three oak trees in front—even felt their bark to familiarize himself with them. At the corner he sought the name of the street, on the lamp, but the glass had been broken, leaving only a red "L" and the fragments and "e." But no matter—he would know where to turn, would know the house when abreast of it.

Now Drace hastened toward the St. Charles. The streets were quiet. But a wagon rattled by, and he saw that it was filled with wounded men. He thought of Shottle and his spirit was oppressed with sorrow. Shottle's escape must have been impossible, and tomorrow they would take his body, throw it into some oozy hole and cover it with mud.

In the lobby of the St. Charles men stood in groups, talking of the fall in the price of cotton. The riot, which to Drace had meant so much, was not even known, so accustomed was the town to scenes of violence. Drace asked the clerk if Shottle had come in. No; his key was in the box. Then Drace thought that surely Liberty must be dead or wounded, hauled away to suffer. He went forth again, to the department of police, to the cavalry barracks, but nothing could he learn. Then in his room he sat sorrowing over his friend and yet thrilled with a selfish happiness, for he had found the barbaric rosemaid. He went to bed, tossed, slept, dreamed in a mingling of distress and gladness, and awoke. Shottle was standing in the room.

"Thank the Lord!" cried Drace, and sprang out of bed.

"That's what I say, friend Virgil. But you will please address me as Colonel Shottle. I am a free man. Here!"



Some One Gave Him an Old Carbine and Another Gave Drace a Cavalry Saber.

He held forth an envelope; opening it, Drace took out a hundred-dollar banknote.

"What does this mean, Lib?"

"I am Colonel Shottle, sir, and not Lib."

"I beg your pardon, Colonel; but what does this mean?"

Shottle sat down and crossed his long legs. He took out a cigar and lighted it.

"Virgil, I fought as long as I thought it was of advantage. The old carbine I had wouldn't shoot, and I want to tell you that mauling darky heads with a piece of iron is hard work. I looked about for you but couldn't find you, and knowing that you knew how to take care of yourself, I began to sniff for a way to get out, found a hole in a wall, ducked through and scooted. That was all natural enough. Anybody could have done that. But now comes the inspirational part. I got around into Royal street and met a steamboat captain who asked me to have a drink, and I needed it, for I had been hard at work.

"So I went in with him. And then up I hops to a gambling house with the money you'd paid me for introducing you to Nadine la Vitte. The poker tables were full, so I nipped in modestly at the faro-bank. That's not a very swift game, but sometimes it is as sure as buying houses and lots, if you've got the patience. I invested cautiously till about daylight, cashed in exactly two hundred, and here I am as refreshed as a horse grazing on clover."

"Colonel, I congratulate you!" said Drace.

The two breakfasted together, and then Drace set out to find again the house at the scene of the riot—the house at the window of which he had seen the face of Nadine la Vitte. At length he found himself in the side street where he had taken refuge the night before, and turning out of this he came to the tree from the limb of which he had cut down the half-strangled victim of the mob. There opposite was the house and there was the window at which he had seen Nadine's face; but across the window, boards had been nailed! The other windows, too, and the doors, were nailed up; the place was deserted. Could that face at the window have been only a creature of his imagination?

An old negro in nondescript livery came down the walk from a house a few doors away. He might have been footman to a harlequin. But when Drace spoke to him, the dignified change in his countenance appeared to alter even the aspect of his attire; and now he might have been usher to a governor. This quick change had been brought about by his intuitive discovery that Drace was a man of consequence.

"Do you know anything about the people who lived across the street?" Drace asked.

"Wall, no sah; da wus po' folks, sah."

"Then you don't know where they went."

"No sah. My 'ployment is ter look after folks ob er higher 'dition, sah. An den ter preach on Sunday."

"Oh, you are a preacher."

"Does your church ever need money?" In a moment he lost his dignity.

"Look yeah, boss, whut's er nigger church fur ef it ain't ter need money? Co'se it need money. But what you gwine do erbout it?

"Yassuh," he said, when Drace had warmed him with a greenback, "I reckon dey done moved away. There was er kind of rumpus last night. And I reckon they all thought it wasn't no place foh dem no mo'; dey lef' mighty sudden-like, uhly dis mawnin'."

And that was all Drace could learn; no one in the vicinity would admit that they knew them or their destination. Disliking to call too much attention to himself, Drace walked away heavy-hearted. For a long time he wandered the streets. He came to the levee, and the French market. He went into the old St. Louis cemetery, and looked upon the novel sight of bodies sepulchered in a wall with doors like a furnace. These compartments, he learned, were rented by the month to the poor; and a short tenantry it was for many a son and daughter of penury answering Eternity's call, for when the grim agent failed to collect the pittance promised by sorrow, the shrouded renter was evicted—an old Spanish custom, Drace was told.

Recalled by these grim surroundings to the purpose that had brought him to the South, Drace now determined to give himself wholly to his quest for Stepho la Vitte. He returned to the hotel, and found Shottle nervous in a cloud of smoke. The floor was covered with burned matches and the stubs of cigars.

"Lib, I'm crushed," announced Drace.

"So am I. But how does it happen that the dust-cart drove over you too?"

"Nadine is gone. The place is nailed up."

"That's tough, all right. But what are you going to do about it? Are you going to come to your puritanic senses and give the whole thing up, or do you expect—"

"I expect to fulfill my sacred mission. I must find Stepho la Vitte."

Shottle got up and shook hands with his friend. He swore that he would make the search the aim of his life. "Suppose you hire me by the day," he suggested. "A man does better work by the day. He always has fresh stimulus every time the sun rises."

"Very well—ten dollars a day."

"That's liberal, Virgil, and I'll take it. And let's get Old Josh to help us. He is more or less acquainted with Stepho's habits."

> "That case of wine was addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Miss."

Singular Cortege.

The other day, along the Grand boulevard of Paris passed a singular funeral cortege. Behind a humble hearse the procession (all on foot) consisted of a woman with five children, a mere handful of soldiers, mostly blacks, and a general of the French army in full dress uniform. The general was General Mangin, and the deceased so singularly honored was the Soudanese who had been his orderly since 1914, and who, incidentally, had been cited in orders for extraordinary gallantry.—Independent, New York.

A Manager at Ninety.

Miss Charlotte Sherman, at the age of ninety, still actively manages the home for girl orphans she established in Southwark, London, some sixty years ago. Miss Sherman is far from old-fashioned. She personally types all her own letters and participates in the instruction of her 200 wards.—From the Argonaut.

HOPE FOR PEACE IN NEAR EAST

Turk Envoys, However, Receive Instructions to Stand Pat on Demands.

U. S. IS TAKING PART

Complete Accord Said to Have Been Reached by All Delegates—Mussolini and Venizelos to Look After Italians and Greeks.

Lausanne—Hope that peace on earth would result from the labors of the Near East conference was voiced by the speakers at the brief opening session.

This sentiment was voiced by President Haab of the Swiss confederation, who presided over the opening plenary meeting, and it was dwelt upon by both Lord Curzon and Ismet Pasha in their responses on behalf of the numerous delegations.

The first day's sitting required only a half hour and the business of the conference was not actively begun until the second day.

Richard Washburn Child, ambassador to Italy, and Joseph C. Grew, minister to Switzerland, the two principal American representatives, were seated prominently in the front row of the auditorium beside Premier Poincare of France, and received a warm welcome from other delegations.

Mussolini Determined.

The prospects of American activity in the conference, which many of the foreigners appeared to interpret as the launching of a new American policy in Europe and the presence of a strong delegation from Japan, gave world-wide significance to the conclave.

Benito Mussolini, the new strong man of Italy, with his air of alert determination, drew all eyes as he moved to his seat not far from Venizelos, whose activities and popularity practically forced the abdictation of a Grecian king and who was here to apply all his diplomatic skill to save what he can for his country in the peace with Turkey which the conference is to formulate.

It was announced that the establishment of a complete accord between Premier Poincare, Lord Curzon and Premier Mussolini on all matters coming up in the conference was celebrated by a dinner of 65 covers which M. Poincare and the French delegation tendered to the British and Italian representatives.

It is understood that the difficulty in satisfying Italy arose from the Italian convention that in the treaty of Sevres which the present conference must revise, Italy's national rights in the Near East were not sufficiently represented and protected.

Constantinople—Although some progress was made at a continuation of the conference between the allied generals and Rafet Pasha, the Turkish nationalist governor of Constantinople, complete agreement was not reached on the question of the standing of the allied police.

NEWBERRY RESIGNS SENATE

Washington.—Truman H. Newberry has resigned as United States senator from Michigan. Forwarded to Governor Groesbeck of the state under date of November 18, Mr. Newberry's letter of resignation, requesting that it might become effective immediately, was made public here after a copy had been transmited to Vice President Coolidge with the request that it be read into the senate record as soon as possible.

Although declaring in a review of the long and bitter controversy over his right to a place in the senate since his election over Henry Ford, his Democratic opponent four years ago, that this right had been "fully confirmed," Mr. Newberry in his letter said he had been impelled to retire from that body because of the defeat of his Republican colleague, Senator Townsend, in the November 7 election. At the same time, in discussing the controversy in its relation to the campaign just closed, during which it was an issue in many states, Mr. Newberry expressed the conviction that a "fair analysis of the vote in Michigan and other states where friends and political enemies alike have suffered defeat, will demonstrate that a general feeling of unrest was mainly responsible."

Before the case passed as an issue into the recent campaign the senate had upheld Mr. Newberry's title to a seat by a margin of five votes, but it appeared that the fight was again to be resumed early in this session of congress.

Gets Night Shift.

Keewatin, Minn.—Night work at the Bennett mine, requiring the immediate employment employment of 250 additional men and an increased payroll approaching $20,000, was announced here by W. P. Chinn of Duluth, general manager of the mine. The mine is owned by the Picklands Mather company and at present employs 250 men on the day shift. The increased operations of the mine is planned in anticipation of an extraordinary ore shipping season in 1923, Mr. Chinn said.

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

Chef Had Plenty But He Could Hardly Eat

Even an expert chef for an up-to-date restaurant, with everything heart could wish in the eating line and the skill to prepare it in the most appetizing manner, finds life miserable and work a burden with his appetite gone and his health all broken up on account of stomach trouble.

According to his own statement, such had been the case for two years with William Lackey, 865 North Wells St., Chicago, Ill., chef at a popular North Clark St. restaurant, who says he recently found relief by taking Tanlac.

Mr. Lackey now boasts of a "wonderful appetite and a stomach that digests such things as ham and eggs, corned beef and cabbage, and rich pastries, foods that would have almost put me out of commission before I took Tanlac."

"Before I ran across this medicine," said he, "I was having to lay off from my work for a week at a time just on account of the numerous ills I suffered from indigestion. But when I tell you I have gained fifteen pounds, eat and digest anything, and am on the job every day feeling fine, you may know how I appreciate Tanlac."

SIGHS FOR REAL SUCCOTASH

Oldtimer Deplores Fact That the Dainty Seems to Have Gone Out of Fashion.

When I was a boy I was very fond of succotash, and down in New England years ago we were told that it was made as the Indians made it, just pole beans and corn boiled together, and maybe it wasn't good!

In traveling around the country at various hotels I often ask for succotash especially at this season of the year when the beans and corn are just right, but what offerings are placed before me under the name of succotash!

In many parts of the country lima beans are used in making succotash but I don't think the Indians knew anything about lima beans.

Succotash, johnnycake, hoecake, apple turnovers, frizzled beef, do you remember them?—From a Letter to the New York Herald.

First Catch Your Man.

The Visitor—Is your oldest sister married—the one who was so proficient in all branches of domestic science?

Philippa—No, nor likely to be. She was so busy fitting herself to be the wife of a good man that she neglected to go after the man.

MADE HER GRIEVANCE PLAIN

Woman Annoyed When Male Escort Got the Benefit and She Received the Abuse.

A woman had annoyed many people who were waiting in line for tickets on a Saturday afternoon at a railway station. The woman had come up at the other side of the window, and though she had been told to get in line, she had put down her money for two tickets and had obtained them at once.

"Just like a woman," muttered some of the men in line. But the woman turned to the man she had just joined and burst forth audibly:

"I don't think it's fair, Jim. You make me do that horrid trick of trying to beat the line because you say men never do such things. And women get the abuse. But I bet that every woman who does that has a man somewhere in the crowd who has insisted that she hurry."

Who's Zoo.

Society women are now carrying monkeys, parrots and even snakes about with them. To identify the ladies in question we shall soon want a "Who's Zoo?"—London Eve.

If thou canst not see the bottom, wade not.

MADE HIM FEEL THE COLD

Young Man's Excellent Exemplification of the Power of Mind Over Matter.

The power of mind over matter has been discussed since mankind found itself.

Epictetus, the Roman slave, knew much about it; so did Marcus Aurelius; Bishop Berkeley of England had his theory; in our day and country it has been made much of by many persons. The latest advocate is Emile Coue, the French exponent of auto-suggestion.

Examples of this influence may be discovered anywhere.

In an elevator, for instance, two young men were discussing the weather.

"Pretty cold this morning," said one.

"Not so cold," declared the other, throwing out his chest.

"It was 36 degrees by my thermometer," said the other.

"Gee!" shivered the second. "If I'd a known that I'd a put on my overcoat."

Short and Long Credits.

Flubb—Short credits make long friends.

Dubb—Yes, but old friends want long credits.—London Answers.

How much sleep do you need?

IT isn't so much a question of the number of hours you spend in bed, as it is of the quality of the sleep you get. Is your sleep sound and restful, or is it fitful and unrefreshing?

One common cause of wakefulness at night is over-stimulation from coffee drinking. For coffee contains caffeine which irritates the nerves and frequently leads to insomnia.

If you have any idea that coffee keeps you awake at night, or makes you nervous, make a change from coffee to delicious Postum.

This pure cereal beverage contains nothing that can harm health, and its flavor is much like coffee. In fact, many people prefer Postum for its flavor alone.

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

Postum FOR HEALTH
"There's a Reason"

Made by Postum Cereal Company, Inc.
Battle Creek, Mich.

The two forms of Postum are equally delicious; and the cost is only about ½c per cup.

About a mile and a half of the east and west road just south from town has been graded down and leveled off the past week to get it ready for the gravel. Almost all of the work has been donated by the farmes of that vicinity which shows a splendid public spirit that could be followed by others to the advantage of the whole country.

If those who are owing for this paper will pay up and a year in advance we will send them the great farm paper, Farm, Stock & Home, free for a year.

While remitting recently for his paper, Grant Flakne of Carrollton, Missouri, wrote that they had fine weather and good crops there and were getting along fine. This year was the only good fruit year but on account of the strike they were unable to take care of it. He says enough fruit rotted on the ground to supply the whole of Marshall county. They raise better corn there, but Minnesota beats Missouri on small grain.

Praises Creamery

In the last issue of the Holt Weekly News, P. L. Anderson Mgr., of the Farmer's Co-Operative Creamery of Holt, submitted a monthly report of the number of pounds of butter-fat per patron for the last month. This report covered the hignest number of pounds. This bank takes great interest in these reports and feel that just such an action by the creamery officials is to be highly encouraged.

It should not only interest the bankers, but mostly the farmers.

It is hoped that these reports will create a competitive action among the farmers to see who will be the highest producer the coming months. When such a feeling is brought into this community, it will not be long before we shall see the results in the creamery reports and we will find ourselves living in a dairy country. It is the dairy cow and corn and cattle that wins the battle. You are to be complimented on your good creamery. Let's BOOST it to be the BEST in Marshall County. The Marshall County State Bank will give every encouragement possible to make this community a better place in which to live and a more prosperous one.

Robert J. Lund, Cashier.

Business Woman Feared She Had Heart Trouble

"Since Tanlac has overcome a bad case of indigestion and nervousness of three or four years' standing for me, my work here in the store is a pleasure, and I am certainly grateful for the good health it has given me," said Mrs. J. W. Pickins, of 516 E. 15th St., Los Angeles, who owns and operates the book store at 219 Mercantile Place.

"I was so run down that I felt miserable all the time. My sleep was broken and restless, I had no appetite, and the gas from undigested food caused my heart to palpitate so I thought I had heart trouble. For a time I had a swelling in my legs, too, and it was an effort for me to get about.

"It is wonderful how Tanlac has given me such perfect relief from these troubles. I eat heartily now, sleep like a child at night, and just feel fine all the time."

A TRUE RAT STORY

Auburntown, Tenn., 6-22-22.

Stearns Electric Paste Co.,

Dear Sirs: Mr. Robert T. Donnell of Auburntown, Tenn., came in our store the other day and wanted something to kill rats, so I sold him a box Stearns Rat Paste. And he put some paste on six biscuits that night and the next morning he found fifty-four big rats. And the second night he put out four more biscuits with paste on them, and the second morning he found seventeen more rats, making a total of seventy-one rats in two nights, and there were lots more that he did not find.

This is some big rat tale, but, nevertheless, it is so. Just thought would write to let you know that your rat paste is good.

Respectfully, KENNEDY BROTHERS.

Lacked Cow Touch.

A Brown county woman, who could hardly be classed as a connoisseur, or even a dilettante, was looking at one of Will Vawter's hills o' Brown landscapes one day and focussed a scornful orb on a cow in the painting. She said it didn't look like a cow, and then, to cap the climax, she ran her hand over the rough surface of the artist's work and said: "Now, see there, that don't feel like a cow at all!"—Indianapolis News.

"FOUND HIM!"

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned.

CHAPTER V

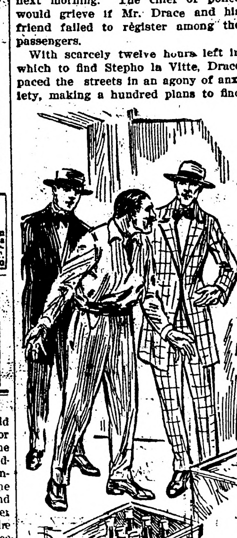
An hour later Drace and Shottle returned to their hotel after a ceremonious visit with Colonel Josh. The Colonel knew of Stepho, had indeed met him once, and he promised to make discreet inquiries that should without fail disclose the creole's whereabouts.

Hardly had Drace reached his room, however, before a visitor was shown in—a visitor who introduced himself as an agent of the New Orleans police department and who had a most distressing communication to make:

It was known that Mr. Drace and his friend had taken part in a recent riot. Mr. Drace was one of the leaders, had severely wounded more than one man, and without cause, being from the North, just arrived, and having no possible interest in the city. However, he was to be treated with more of lenity than would rhyme with his crime, for instead of punishment he was only to be banished, along with his friend. A steamboat, the Bumblebee, bound northward, would leave next morning. The chief of police would grieve if Mr. Drace and his friend failed to register among the passengers.

With scarcely twelve hours left in which to find Stepho la Vitte, Drace paced the streets in an agony of anxiety, making a hundred plans to find Stepho or to outwit the New Orleans officials and prolong his stay, but all in vain.



"Zat Is Ze Private Stock," He Snarled

Colonel Josh did not appear, but he seemed to have embarked upon the quest, for when the distracted Drace called at his quarters about midnight, the old fellow was still absent. Dawn brought Drace back again, for all his other endeavors had been unsuccessful, and but two hours remained before the Bumblebee's departure.

Routed out of bed, the Colonel kept Drace waiting a full half hour before he put in an appearance. Then, however, he offered a faint ray of hope. He had discovered that a certain Frenchman, a wine dealer, living at an address he produced scrawled on paper, was reported to be an intimate of Stepho. Possibly from him Mr. Drace might—

Drace hurriedly explained the decree which had banished him; then he "presented" the Colonel with a check on account, asked him to convey his respects to Miss Lucy and took his departure.

On his way to the Frenchman's he stopped at the hotel, where he found Shottle strapping up their baggage—and a police official paying an informal but suggestive call. An hour's grace remained. Drace paid his score at the desk, sent his baggage to the boat and then, summoning a cab, drove off with Shottle to the house of the Frenchman. It proved to be a mean abode, both wineshop and dwelling. Drace knocked eagerly. A small man, his mustache dyed, came to the door, blinking.

"I beg your pardon, sir, but I am a friend of Mr. la Vitte, and—"

"Pardon, monsieur, but you do not look like him, ze friend."

"But I am. And I came with word that will be of advantage to him. The police are after him—"

"Aw, he know zat. Monsieur would trouble himself for nothing. Good morning."

"Just a moment, please. You have no need to look on me with suspicion. I am his friend—and—"

"If you his friend," interrupted the man, "you know he gone—to Europe, on steamer to France."

Drace was about to abandon the man in despair when Shottle, who had been staring at a case of wine which stood by the door ticketed and sealed for shipment, suddenly interrupted.

"Ah," he cried, "can this be the famous Chateau Yquem?" And brushing past the Frenchman, he leaned over as if to examine the bottle. With a cry, the wine merchant shoved him rudely away. "Zat is ze private stock," he snarled. "He is not for sale. I am not yet open for business, sirs. Good morning."

Shottle grasped Drace's arm and drew him away. A cart had halted outside, and as they entered their cab they saw the carter shouldering the case of wine and bearing toward his vehicle.

As they turned the corner, a deep-throated blast from the Bumblebee sounded a warning. Shottle turned upon the disappointed Drace with a gleeful countenance. "Master," he said, "I'll thank you for that money again. I've found him."

"Found him!" exclaimed Drace. "How?"

"That case of wine was addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. That wine is going to Stepho on the Bumblebee. And so are we!"

An hour later Drace sat with Shottle on the deck of the Bumblebee, watching the ever-changing panorama of the Mississippi and musing upon the sudden shifting of his quest.

"Liberty," asked Drace presently, "how far up is this Farnum's Landing? Do you recall it?"

"Yes," said Liberty. "I know this river. Farnum's Landing is—by golly!" he exclaimed, breaking off, "Farnum's Landing is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing! And General Bethpage is my uncle! We'll go there."

"But," Drace said dubiously, "he's not my uncle, and I'm afraid it would be intruding somewhat on his hospitality to—"

"Nothing of the sort," averred Liberty. "Any friend of mine would be doubly welcome. You can't know much about the General. Taming, now, but he used to be the most remarkable character, in a quiet way, along the river. And when I tell you about him, Virgil, you'll laugh. Before the war he was professor at Newsome, a little college up in the scrub-oak country. He entered the army as a colonel and came out as a brigadier."

"I don't see anything to laugh at in that"

"No, but wait. He had considerable money, and at times used to come down to New Orleans to enjoy himself. On one occasion he lost all his money at roulette."

"Still nothing to laugh at."

"No? All the property he had with him was a bodyservant, a Guinea negro named Dip. So what does he do? He says to the proprietor of the gambling house: 'I wish to play this negro, sir.' 'All right; I'll take off the limit and let you play him. How much is he worth?' says the gambler. 'I don't want to play his value in money, but him, I tell you,' says the General. 'Say the word, and I'll bet him on one of these numbers.' He had been losing every bet, and the proprietor knew that it would be safe. So he says: 'All right, go ahead.'

"The General wasn't sober, so he calls the darky and says: 'Dip, stand here with your forefingers on number twenty, right here.' The darky did so, and they turned the wheel, everybody laughing. Well, sir, if twenty didn't win, the world is a puffball! Won, and the owner of the place turned pale! He knew that he'd have to pay or close up his house. So he says: 'All right, get at his value, and I'll pay the bet.' 'Value!' cries the General. 'I didn't bet his value, but him. I want thirty-five Guinea negroes. Size them up to him.'"

"What a farce!" commented Drace.

"Was it? Well, I reckon not. They had to go out and buy thirty-five Guinea negroes. It took quite a while, but the General waited. And when they had all been sized up, the General went up the River, with his thirty-five Guinea negroes trailing after him."

Now Drace could see the picture of it, and he laughed. This was the man he was going to visit!

The Bumblebee was jointly owned and operated by Major Pewitt and a young fellow named William Hawkins. It was a fine steamer, but while it was cunningly masked as a public carrier, Shottle was quick to discover that it was in truth a nomad gambler, profuse in entertainment that taxed not the giver. But the entertainment sought by this pelican, as the gamesters termed Shottle, was not of wine from France, the fish-egg from Russia or venison from America's native woods, but spades, hearts, diamonds and clubs. And while the Bee still lay at the wharf, breathing low and blubberously through her nostrils, Shottle had put in operation a quickly contrived "touch," presenting himself to Major Pewitt before he had taken the time to introduce his friend to that well-known character.

Now, however, Major Pewitt strolled up; and Shottle, keen to get to the gaming table, introduced Pewitt to Drace and then a moment later himself slipped away.

"We are on our way to visit Shottle's uncle, General Bethpage," explained Drace.

"What, my old friend and fellow-soldier, Bethpage! Never a nobler man drew sword in defense of what he conceived to be right. If you like a genial atmosphere and a company that never tires, you will remain with him as long as possible and still too short a time. I earnestly hope that you may find inducement to settle among us."

"Possibly I may. I like the River. I like the study of character. In character there is all history, all philosophy, all—"

"Just so," the Major agreed. "And we have some remarkable characters here, sir, and some of the most beautiful women in the world; to some people it may appear a little singular, but interesting character among men always develops in an atmosphere producing beauty among women."

"And naturally, Major, you are acquainted with both characters and beauty. And by the way, did you ever meet an old fellow—let me see, what is his name? Oh, I think they call him Stepho — something. Oh, yes — La Vitte?"

"My young friend, they have told you about the most implacable and desperate of men, sir. I know the man, and while nature did not intend—and I beg your pardon for what might seem a want of modesty—that I should fear any human being, yet I confess to an occasional uneasiness in the presence of old Stepho la Vitte. I have never had any words with him—that is, strained words; but if I should, I'd await no move on his part but shoot him instantly. Ha, I wish you to meet my dear young friend and much esteemed partner, William Hawkins."

"Uncle, this is Virgil Drace, my best friend."

ASIA MINOR IS TRAGEDY SCENE

Refuges Crowding Down to the Fringes of Black Sea and Mediterranean.

NO FOOD FOR STARVING

Pitiful Appeals for Help Sent by American Warships in Near East—Snow Makes Suffering Intense.

Constantinople—Another human tragedy that promises to rival the Smyrna fire is developing in northern Asia Minor, where the tide of a quarter of a million Christian inhabitants is sweeping in full flood to the fringes of the Black sea and the Mediterranean.

These refugees are clamoring to be saved. The American naval base at Constantinople is deluged with SOS calls from the flotilla of American destroyers patrolling the Mediterranean and Black sea coasts of Asia Minor, which are crowded with Christians fleeing from the Turk. There is a poignant note of despair and tragedy in every message snatched from the air. Appeals from land to "save our souls" are received almost hourly and are taxing the capacity of the American radio staff here.

Thousands of Orphans.

Appeals come from every part of Anatolia, where whole Christian communities are migrating and where the American Near East Relief is working heroically to overcome almost insuperable obstacles, including the removal of orphans for great distances to the sea.

Cryptic radiographs received here indicated that "a critical situation was developing with surprising suddenness; the whole interior is blanketed with snow, adding immeasurably to the misery of the exiles."

A wireless from the destroyer Barry said:

"Five hundred Christians are arriving at Samsun daily from parts unknown."

Another from the Barry, relayed from Sivas, in the interior of Anatolia, said:

"Ten thousand Christians and two thousand orphans trudging through the snow from Sivas are looking to the Americans to save them."

Many Near Death.

Another destroyer relayed a dramatic appeal to the Near East Relief at Constantinople from James H. Crutcher of Tuscaloosa, Ala., at Samsun. "Can you take a thousand mountain children? If not it means their end."

One from the destroyer Lawrence came from Americans at Trebizond, declaring: "We cannot hold up evacuation of Trebizond much longer. We are overwhelmed by arrivals from the interior. Instruct immedaitely."

RUSSIA ASKS PARLEY HAND

Lausanne—America's insistence for the open door and equality economically in the Near East, which follows her traditional demands for equal commercial privileges in the Far East, was cited by the Russian delegation as supporting an official communication forwarded by the Russian delegation to the conference asking for the right of speech on all matters before the body.

Russia objects vigorously to any attempt to limit her activities in the discussion of the future status of the Dardanelles; she claims that all topics on the Lausanne agenda are closely related to the supreme object of freedom of the straits and that stable peace in the Near East can be attained only by allowing the Russian delegates free participation on the same basis as the other great powers.

Points to U. S. Stand.

In their official petition the Russians affirm that only by following the principle of equality can the conference hope to reach the goal of greater equity in their relations between nations—"as expressed at the opening of the conference and confirmed by the recent declaration of the representative of the United States."

ILLINOIS ROCKED BY QUAKE

St. Louis, Mo.—Considerable property damage was caused by earth tremors of moderate intensity in eastern Missouri, southern Illinois, western Indiana, and northwestern Kentucky, according to reports reaching here. The tremors shook buildings and homes, toppled chimneys from residences, broke windows, knocked chinaware from shelves and frightened residents in the parts of the four states.

Hunger Striker Is Released.

Dublin.—Miss Mary MacSwiney, who has been hunger striking in Mount Joy prison, has been released. Her release came on the twenty-third day of her hunger strike. She had refused to take food since her arrest on November 4, when she was seized during a raid on a house in Aylesbury Road by nationalist troops who were seeking Eamonn De Valera. Miss MacSwiney was released at 7 p. m., and was taken in an automobile to the Mater hospital.

SPENT HALF HER TIME IN BED

Farmer's Wife Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her a Well Woman

Carter's Creek, Tenn.—"Three years ago I was almost an invalid. I spent half of my time in bed, being afflicted with a trouble which women of a certain age are apt to have. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Tablets and used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I am a well woman now and have been for two years. I can work as well as any one who is younger and as I am a farmer's wife I have plenty to do for I cultivate my own garden, raise many chickens and do my own housework. You may publish this letter as I am ready to do anything to help other women as I have been so well and happy since my troubles are past."—Mrs. E.T. GALLOWAY, Carter's Creek, Tenn.

Most women find plenty to do. If they are upset with some female ailment and troubled with such symptoms as Mrs. Galloway had, the smallest duty seems a mountain.

If you find it hard to keep up, if you are nervous and irritable, without ambition and out of sorts generally, give the Vegetable Compound a fair trial. We believe it will help you greatly, for it has helped others.

Progress in Sahara.

The limits of the great arid wastes of the Sahara desert are slowly being narrowed by the invasion of windmills and motorcars. The oases are being linked together by good motor highways and the sinking of wells is greatly increasing the tillable area. The soil is fertile and, wherever water can be obtained, tropical fruits, millet and other cereals may be raised.

A trans-Saharian railroad has been proposed by the French government, but there are many technical problems to be solved in the construction of such a line. The desirability and value of a rail connection across the desert between southern Algeria on the north and western French Africa on the south is obvious.

Family skeletons are kept in the papers now, instead of closets.

One way to learn the truth is to let a lot of politicians talk out of turn.

Events are showing the difference between a neutral zone and a safety zone.

They say the price of coke is to be cut. The price of coke could stand it.

A man's definition of a living wage depends on whether he is getting it or giving it.

Paris prices are reported 368 per cent higher than a score of years back. To tourists?

Some minds are so open that they can't retain an idea.

Pity the poor bachelor. He has no home to stay away from.

The slogan of all blocs is the quaint American phrase: "Gimme."

He laughs at scars who never tried to start a fire with kerosene.

How easy it is to get the drop on a burglar in a pistol advertisement.

As a rule, people who suffer in silence suffer, because they are silent.

The equality of all men is made impossible by the quality of most men.

If it wasn't for trains running into cows, some farmers never would succeed.

The man whose wife insists on a thick squirrel coat looks ahead to a hard winter.

Ignorance.

Senator Medill McCormick said at a dinner in Washington:

"The League of Nations has failed. To champion it is to show an ignorance equal to the copy reader's.

"You remember, I am sure, the escape of A. Savage Landor, the explorer, from Thibet? Landor escaped, you know, but he bore the marks of brutal tortures.

"This happened back in 1909 or 1910. There was a copy reader in Chicago at the time who had never heard of the explorer, Landor, and when the dispatch about him came in, the poor ignorant copy reader edited it so that it appeared in his paper in the morning like this:

"'A savage landor has made its appearance in Thibet but the beast escaped after being badly mauled.'"

DYED HER DRAPERIES, SKIRT AND A SWEATER WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can dye or tint faded, shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, sweaters, stockings, hangings, draperies, everything like new. Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed, even if you have never dyed before. Tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade, or run. So easy to use. Advertisement.

Long Words.

In respect to legitimate words most authorities agree that first in rank comes "antidisestablishmentarianism" (28) letters, followed by "honorificabilitudinity" (22 letters)

Every man loves a wood fire in the grate, but seldom well enough to saw the logs for it.

Let Us Hope.

"The old prejudice against being photographed in a hat seems to be dying out," says a fashion writer. It is hoped that this foreshadows an end of the modern reluctance to be photographed in a dress.—London Punch.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Rolla Potter and Nora Potter, his wife, mortgagors to the Farmers State Bank of Grygla, mortgagee, dated July 24, 1917, with Power of Sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 30, 1917, at 2:00 P. M. in Book 84 of Mortgages on Page 408, which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter assigned as follows: Farmers State Bank of Grygla to Northwestern Trust Company, dated August, 1, 1917, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, August 28, 1917. at 1:00 P. M. in Book 850 of mortgages on page 251; Northwestern Trust Company to H. H. Parkhouse dated August 14, 1917, and duly filed for record in the said office November 14, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock A. M. in Book 108 of mortgages on Page 505; which default consists in failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of $60.00 interest coupon falling due July 24, 1921, and in the payment of other principal and interest since falling due. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000.00 principal and $60.00 interest coupon with interest on both amounts at six per cent per annum since July 24, 1922, and the sum of $60.00 interest coupon with interest thereon at six per cent since July 24, 1921, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One thousand one hundred forty-six dollars ($1146.00) and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Northeast quarter (NE1-4) and the East half (E1-2) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section eight (8) in Township One hundred fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth principal Meridian for Minnesota in said Marshall County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said county at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren in said county and state on the 16th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1146.00 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements provided by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

THE GENERAL

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting.

Drace was much taken with Hawkins, his quiet manner, his athletic mold, and passed some time with him in talk, the Major having given to Hawkins a scheming wink.

The boat was now fluting her ruffled way up the river. At a table beneath a great shaded lamp, Shottle sat, not alone, not staring into vacancy but into the expressionless countenance of men merciless in vivisection. Luck at first had cajoled him, let him swell the fifty he had obtained to near five hundred, but a yellow-looking swab of whiskers entangled with him and leeched him down to twenty-five. Shottle looked at him, his caterpillar eyebrows, heard his slight hacking cough, his request for a glass of ice-water, and said to himself:

"One of these days I may have a chance to set fire to you as I would any other patch of dead grass."

Slowly and with an economy painful for him to practice, Shottle with many ups and downs built up again toward two hundred; but at length in the afternoon an old citizen who sat high and who looked like a steer, hooked him and horned him broke.

Shottle came stumbling over the doorsill and found Drace in conversation with Major Pewitt and William Hawkins. With a wink the Major enjoined a humorous silence, and mutely they sat attendant on the loser's mood. Shottle sat down, took out a card, wrote on it, put it back into his pocket, tapped his teeth with the pencil and spoke:

"I have just written a resolve, and whenever I do, it becomes a law of my being. It has just been enacted and recorded that never again on this earth am I to bet another cent. I may go to houses where there are card parties, but never again am I to shuffle a deck. My career as a fool is ended . . . Who was it that wrote, 'If at first you don't succeed, try, try again'? A prison sentence would be too good for the hatcher of such a fallacy. If at first you find you're wrong, quit. That's my course for the future."

"I congratulate you. But what are you going to do?" Drace inquired.

"I will drag a surveyor's chain and squint at the landscape. I'll lug a tripod and eat a raw turnip in the wind. Or, if compelled to be humbler, I can curry horses."

"And bet some fellow that you'll have your horses curried first," said the Major.

"The first squirt of cold water generally comes from one as much afflicted as yourself. But no matter. Cold water chills, but at the same time it cleanses. And from this time on, gentlemen, Liberty Shottle, the vague and unreal, will become the obvious and the actual. If I had a thousand dollars right now, I wouldn't bet that the sun will rise tomorrow. Oh, there is such a thing as redemption."

CHAPTER VI.

About four o'clock in the afternoon the Bumblebee passed Farnum's Landing, and later touched at Bethpage Landing. From the crest of the high embankment was an endless view of spreading cane fields. The General's house stood in the midst of old trees near half a mile from the river. Leading from the landing was a road in the perpetual shade of low-branching live oaks. Along the road wild poppies blazed in patches of sunlight, and in the shade glowed the color of darker blood. In clumps of feathery grasses insects sang, while from everywhere came the low and drowsy murmur of the cane.

Drace was enchanted with the scene, the sweet air. Beside him Shottle long-legged his way, his neck stretched out.

"Yonder comes Uncle Howard, the General," he said.

Toward them, with a slow but firm and emphatic step, came a tall, spare, erect old gentleman; and as he drew nearer, Drace saw that he wore a mustache and whiskers trimmed neatly down to a sharp point. The soldier within him predominated, the professional soldier, who is often gentler and more kindly than the volunteer. Shottle hailed him, and he quickened his pace.

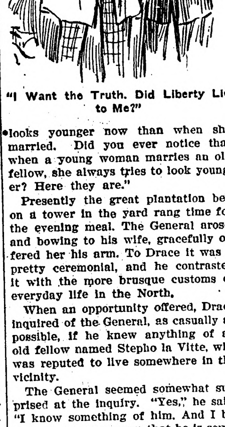
"Well, well, Liberty Shottle! Welcome, sir, and your friend—"

"Uncle, this is Virgil Drace, my best friend."

The old man straightened, held out both his hands and made Liberty's friend welcome most hospitably.

Now they walked toward the house, the General with his hand on Drace's arm. Over the yard fence poured a stream of hounds, and an old 'possum-dog "barked up" Shottle as if he had treed. The double hallway doors stood open. The General conducted Drace into the library, a room that looked big enough for a tennis court. Then he hastily withdrew, and Shottle spoke:

"Gone to find Aunt Tycie. You'll like her. No hickory tree sap is any sweeter than her disposition. She was a Shottle, my father's young sister. She's young, as I told you. And she looks younger now than when she married. Did you ever notice that when a young woman marries an old fellow, she always tries to look younger? Here they are."



"I Want the Truth. Did Liberty Lie to Me?"

Presently the great plantation bell on a tower in the yard rang time for the evening meal. The General arose, and bowing to his wife, gracefully offered her his arm. To Drace it was a pretty ceremonial, and he contrasted it with the more brusque customs of everyday life in the North.

When an opportunity offered, Drace inquired of the General, as casually as possible, if he knew anything of an old fellow named Stepho la Vitte, who was reputed to live somewhere in the vicinity.

The General seemed somewhat surprised at the inquiry. "Yes," he said, "I know something of him. And I believe there are rumors that he is sometimes seen across the River near here. During the war he was a guerrilla and cast much blame on the Confederacy. I met him once, after the war—near your father's house, my dear. My mules were tired, and I had halted in the shade to let them rest, when up came two men; one put his hand on the wheel of my buggy and said that my mules were his—that they had been stolen from him. I laughed, but meantime I had the muzzle of a pistol between his eyes. He didn't flinch nor wink. He looked at me and said that he may have made a mistake. I told him I thought he had. Then, taking his hand off my wheel, he bowed himself back and said that he would see me again, to apologize. But I haven't seen him since."

In the evening how still and sweet was the air! From the quarters came the weird drone of the negro's chant, for the habit of the slave had not fallen with his chain. In the parlor Aunt Tycie sang, in this house a custom to be dreaded by the learned ear; but Drace's ear was not learned; Shottle's was as an oyster-shell clapped to his head; and in music the General could not distinguish intention from accomplishment. It was a song of love, "Hast Thou No Feeling to See Me Kneeling?" and when its last note had found a dark corner wherein to die, Drace requested her to sing it again. She gave him a grateful look; the General smiled at him; and as the song began again to mourn its way, Shottle said to himself:

"If Providence will lend virtue to a scheme, that will cost you money, Virgil. Came here to rest after going through more than Stonewall Jackson could stand, and this is what I get! Oh, it's respectable and ought to be endured, and so is a casket lined with satin, but it doesn't suit me. Lord, but this atmosphere is unsympathetic!"

If you have patience to wait, bedtime always comes; history is strewn with bedtime. It came slow-footed for Shottle, but quickly enough for Drace, with his nerves of steel wire. And how delighted he was with his room, a museum of antiquity, a great four-poster bedstead with a canopy heavy enough to have served as deadfall to some medieval giant. A chair that looked like the oaken throne of an ancient Briton, a wardrobe wherein Bluebeard might have hanged his wives, a rough-hewn mantelpiece remindful of a beetling cliff—these were featured in the light of a hanging lamp big enough to turn the ashes of a cremated dragon.

The night was warm, and through the windows the air came cool and lulling from the Gulf; but Drace lay until daybreak before he slept, and when he awoke the noontime bell was ringing. A negro knocked to tell him that dinner was ready. The General and Tycie were seated, but Shottle was not at the table with them; and following Drace's look of inquiry, came explanation from the General:

"I gave him the five hundred dollars that he was to put in with the five hundred furnished by you to be invested initiatively in that cotton-bagging factory at Vicksburg, and he took an early boat for that city. I think it is a fortunate thing for the South that they discovered a wild plant, a sort of jute, really better for making ropes and bagging than either flax or hemp. I had seen nothing about the discovery, but I am not a very close reader of the newspapers. But Shottle assures me that this wild jute can be grown on the poorest land and that it needs no tending. I am naturally cautious, Virgil, and I did not myself invest, but backing your judgment in the matter, I loaned Liberty five hundred. When do you expect active operations toward building the factory?"

Tycie forestalled Drace's answer:

"Oh, I am sure it will succeed, and it will be a great thing, especially for Liberty. He has tried so hard, but somehow his energies haven't been properly directed. And he is so capable!"

She was so confident, and so hopeful for her luckless kinsman, that Drace played protecting villain to Shottle's purposes.

"Well, I don't know exactly when they are to begin work, but soon, I trust."

She gave him a grateful look for his trust, now perfectly assured of Shottle's useful future. But the General did not appear to be easy in his mind, and a little later when he and Drace were walking about the yard, beneath the trees, he referred again to the investment. Drace would have shuffled away from it, but the old gentleman cornered him with a question:

"I want the truth. Did Liberty lie to me?"

"Yes, sir, he did."

"I began to think so the moment he left me. Well, it is a singular thing, that when he is with me, I believe in him, but the moment he is gone my faith has gone with him. I have had much experience with men, Mr. Drace, in the army and elsewhere, but my wife's nephew is the most—I don't know how to define him. Let me thank you for protecting him in the presence of my wife, and I regret that I may have seemed in doubt. But Drace, that fellow makes me angry with myself. Confound him, he almost convinces me at times that I have no stability of character. And yet I am fond of him. I am always glad to see him come. And let me say that he illustrates one truth very clearly—that ability consists mostly in the fervor with which we go at a thing. I suppose he has cost you considerable."

> "Monsieur, how foolish to come! If you do not go now, in a short time you will die."

Minneapolis—Judge Page Morris, entered into the last week's session of United States district court, with five liquor cases remaining on the Minneapolis calendar for trial. During the present term of Federal court Judge Morris has disposed of 250 liquor cases.

Red Wing—An outdoor picnic, including a river trip, in California would not be any stunt to mention, but in Minnesota at the end of November is something of a novelty. A party of Red Wing people participated in such a picnic, going up river by launch to the summer home of a Red Wing resident, in almost summer weather, and indulging in a picnic supper.

Hibbing—Starting with a mere handful of unemployed, a procession which gathered recruits as it progressed until several hundred men were in line, paraded the streets of the downtown district of Hibbing, in silent protest against the action of the village council in refusing to vacate streets and alleys in that section of old Hibbing sold to mining interests two years ago.

Minneapolis—All claims for refunds or credits on 1917 federal taxes must be made before March 1, 1923, according to Harry Harper, tax consultant, who returned to Minneapolis, from two weeks of conference with the bureau of internal revenue in Washington.

Crookston—The body of Anton L. Bakken, a farmer who disappeared from his home, 15 miles southeast of Crookston was found in a grove one mile from his home. The coroner said Bakken had shot himself through the chest. Worry over a farm debt was blamed.

SOVIET ENVOY BACKS TURKEY

Asks that Bosphorus and Dardanelles be open to Turk Warships Only.

EQUALITY DEMANDED

Says Waters Belong to Turks and Should Be Used Only by Turks Whether in Peace or War.

Lausanne—The fundamental position of Russia on the question of the status to be given the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora and the Straits of Dardanelles was outlined by Foreign Minister Tchitcherin, who read a prepared statement in French, of which the following official summary was given out:

"The Russian delegation will strive to attain equality of the positions and rights of Russia and her allies—the Ukraine and Georgia—with the positions and rights of the other powers; and will strive to safeguard the peace and security of Russian territories and liberty of their economic relations with the other powers."

Want Durable Settlement.

M. Tchitcherin contended that permanent liberty of the commercial navigation and pacific maritime communications in the Bosphorus, the Sea of Marmora, and the Dardanelles, must be assured in the most absolute manner and without restrictions. He said:

"Maintenance of peace on the Black sea and the security of its coasts, peace in the Near East and the security of Constantinople should be guaranteed in a durable manner. This means that the Dardanelles and the Bosphorus, in time of peace, as in time of war, ought to be constantly closed to the warships and armed vessels, as well as the military airplanes of all countries except Turkey. Only in this way can liberty of peaceful navigation in these waters be effectually guaranteed.

Belong to Turkey, He Says.

M. Tchitcherin said that the Russian government started with the elementary fact that the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles belong to Turkey, and that the Turkish people are entitled to full sovereignty over their territory and waters.

M. Tchitcherin said Turkey could effectively defend her waters against attack by possessing the right to fortify and arm her coasts, by possessing a fleet of warships, and by utilizing for her defense every technical means of modern warfare.

M. Tchitcherin then passed to what was interpreted as an allusion to England. He said:

"Closing the straits to other warships conforms to the principle of equality between states. Throwing them open will give a preponderating position to the strongest maritime power."

3 BILLION ASKED FOR BUDGET

Deficit for 1922 Almost $274,000,000 Over Income.

Washington—Appropriations aggregating $3,078,940,331 for the fiscal year beginning next July 1 were proposed to congress by President Harding in the second annual federal budget. This is exclusive of the postal service and compares with actual appropriations for this fiscal year totalling $3,274,238,690.

Government expenditures for the coming fiscal year, also exclusive of the postal service, were estimated at $3,180,843,234, as compared with an estimate of $3,703,801,671 for this fiscal year and an actual outlay of $3,795,302,499 for the fiscal year ended last June 30.

Hopes for Excess.

The total federal revenue for 1924 was reckoned at $3,361,812,359, or an excess of $180,969,125 over projected expenditures. The estimated revenue for this fiscal year was $3,429,862,959, or $273,938,712 less than the expected outlay.

Mr. Harding said, however, that it was hoped to eliminate this deficit before the end of the year; adding that if this hope were not realized, the expected surplus for 1924 would give a margin to take care of a deficit.

In his message accompanying the detailed budget, the president frankly told congress that whether the country could look forward to any further material reduction in federal expenditures and taxes in future years depended largely upon whether there was a curtailment of expansion of federal aid in lines of research, improvement and development.

Greek Prince Is Exiled.

Athens—Prince Andrew, brother of former King Constantine, has been sentenced by a military court to banishment for life and deprivation of his rank. He will not suffer actual degradation. The judgment of the court finds that Prince Andrew refused to obey orders in the presence of the enemy and moved his army corps in another direction, but considers that in view of his lack of experience in commanding masses of fighting troops application of the penalties provided by law would not be justifiable.

DOCTOR ORDERED WOMAN OBEYED

Took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and is Now Well

Chicago, Illinois.—"You surely gave women one good medicine when you put Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound on the market. After I had my baby I was all run down and so nervous it kept me from gaining. My doctor did everything he could to build me up, then he ordered me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with his medicine and I am now a new woman. I have had three children and they are all Lydia E. Pinkham babies. I have recommended your medicine to several friends and they speak highly of it. You are certainly doing good work in this world."—Mrs. ADRITH TOMSHECK, 10557 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

There is nothing very strange about the doctor directing Mrs. Tomsheck to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. There are many physicians who do recommend it and highly appreciate its value.

Women who are nervous, run down, and suffering from women's ailments should give this well-known root and herb medicine a trial. Mrs. Tomsheck's experience should guide you towards health.

The Left-Over Doll

By Christopher G. Hazard

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

WHAT was the left-over doll thinking about as she hung on the topmost twig of the Christmas tree all alone? Perhaps about all the other gifts that had been taken off by loving hands and given to the boys and girls. Maybe she was wondering whether there would be a Christmas tree every winter, bearing such nice fruit in such a strange season, if there had not been such a great gift from God as come on Jesus' birthday. More than all, however, she must have been asking herself why she was left over, why nobody wanted her, why the name that was pinned on her dress had not been called.

She was as good a doll as ever was made. Her eyes would open and shut, she always had a smile upon her face, her cheeks were rosy, she did not have a pug nose, and her dress was beautiful. When they put her on the tree she thought her name would be the very first one. She could hardly wait to hear it, and she wondered if they would never get through singing carols. Now it was all over and she wasn't wanted at all, not by anybody, not even by Sally Wiggins, who had no doll—not even one. She wasn't wanted! Oh, it was too bad, and her eyes tried to wink out two tears.

So they put her in the basket with the other unwanted things, and there the minister found her the next Sunday. She was lying there fast asleep, with a little carpet sweeper near her, and a box of candy close by, and a looking glass by her side. At her feet there was a spruce cone that had fallen off of the tree, and the bit of paper that had told who she was meant for, but her eyes were shut—she had retired from the world, no one wanted her.

There she was still when the minister came into the room the next Sunday morning. But now her eyes were wide open, only she wasn't looking at the presents in the basket. She was awake, but turned away, and still trying to squeeze out some tears because she was left over. And every time the minister took her up she would shut her eyes and go to sleep again, unless he held her up pretty straight, and then she seemed to be sad, and to be dreaming about being left over, even while she was awake.

She wasn't awake even on children's day until little baby Mower came in to get ready to be baptized, but as soon as he held her up she opened her eyes, and when she saw what a pleasant little boy he was she looked pleasant and hopeful again. Then he put her down, and she went to sleep and slept until Christmas came again!

With a new Christmas there she was upon a tree once more, and they were singing carols again and getting ready to call off the names. This time she was sure that somebody would want her, for she had been patient a whole year, and she hadn't made any fuss even though she had felt so sorry. Besides, this was the very best tree they had ever had, and so many had come to see it. It was full of gifts—not like the little tree that the minister saw in the corner of a house parlor—the mother said, "It's most all tree and paper, but it's a tree"—there were go-carts, and everything, and an Indian tomahawk to go with a boy's warwhoop, and some fringed pants to be put on with them, and a picture of a little girl in red, under a big umbrella, in a snowstorm, and "Ain't this a nice snowy day?" written under the picture, and lots of things, and the left-over doll, looking so friendly and nice—nicer than ever.

Well, they began to call the names, and almost the first thing somebody took down the left-over doll and gave her to Polly Rankin! Polly is just the dearest child I know. It was Polly who had said that she wished she had a doll to pet and bring up right. I am sure that Polly will do it. She will make the left-over doll feel very much wanted. She will teach her to be always cheerful. She will find her very obedient, and even nicer than she looks, and she will be kind to her. I hope that when the left-over doll is grown up she will be just like Polly!

"Santa Claus."

"Santa Claus" is a corruption which originated apparently in Flanders or possibly among the Dutch, of the name St. Nicholas, a saint noted for his love of children and his boundless charity. His "day" was perhaps December 6, originally, but since the displacement of Old Father Christmas, the British representation of the Christmas spirit, he is celebrated al most universally as the Christmas saint

MOSLEMS MUST KEEP PLEDGES

United States and Japan Join With England, France and Italy on Stand Taken.

TURK ENVOY PROTESTS

Pasha Contends That Turkey Wiped Out All Special Privileges for Foreigners in Declaration Made in 1914.

Lausanne—America and Japan lined up with Great Britain, France and Italy when they took their stand against Ismet Pasha's contention that Turkey had wiped out all the capitulations, or extra territorial rights for foreigners, by declaring them null in October, 1914.

Marquis Di Garroni, for Italy, opened the session with the explanation that the sultan first induced foreigners to enter into trade with Turkey by giving them special privileges and guarantees. He declared the allies were willing to do their best to meet the Turkish objections, but he explained that the foreigners were anxious for the protection of the enterprises which they have developed. He warned Ismet that the Turks will require much foreign assistance in the reconstruction of their country and therefore must consider the attitude of the foreign powers and financiers. The commission decided to name three subcommissions to consider the various aspects of the capitulations problem and report to the conference.

Gulf Is Wide One.

The gulf between the Turks and the other powers on the capitulations problem is so wide that it will be difficult to bridge. Ismet Pasha and all his associates, driven on by emphatic demands from Angora are insistent that the system has been entirely eliminated.

COUNTERFEITERS CAPTURED

Gang Made British Notes—Feat Hitherto Thought Impossible.

New York—With the arrest of John Popovich of Los Angeles carrying 93,500 pounds sterling in counterfeit notes, or more than $450,000 face value, United States secret service agents said they had captured the third of a gang of counterfeiters who have done what was heretofore considered almost impossible—making and passing bogus Bank of England notes. The other two alleged members of the band reported to be under arrest in Los Angeles are Oscar A. Simon and Ivan Glavadonovic.

Popovich was checking out at a Broadway hotel when secret service agents, who had been registered at the same hotel, arrested him after he had paid his bill in United States currency. They said he was about to leave for Canada and in his traveling bag they said they found 535 counterfeit bank notes of 100 pounds denomination and 800 of 50 pounds.

The secret service agents ascribe the success of the counterfeiters in part to the fact that since the war many inexperienced dealers in foreign exchange have set up in business.

PRODUCTION IS INCREASED

Washington—Virtually all basic industries in the United States are showing increased productive activity, according to the Federal Reserve board which, in a review of business and trade conditions recently made public, reported a generally improved situation in the American business world.

The improved conditions, according to the review, are reflected first, in a greatly increased employment of labor in industrial establishments and, second, in an unprecedented demand for freight cars. Reports showed that on November 1 the greatest shortage of freight cars that ever developed was recorded, while immediately before and after that date the car loadings were maintained almost at the maximum.

Mill consumption of textiles was heavy, the review stated, and added that the mill requirements of cotton continued on an increase which late in October and early in November reached the heaviest in the last two years.

"The increased production," the review summarized, "has been accompanied by a continued increase in the volume of employment in industrial establishments. The average pay per worker also was large, but this was due in many cases to increased hours of labor. Railroad repair shops and equipment factories made the largest addition to their forces and shortage of skilled labor was reported in steel mills and metal mines and by building contractors."

Additional War Suits Prepared

Washington—Additional civil suits involving $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 which the government hopes to recover for alleged overcharges and waste in connection with the construction of certain army cantonments during the war are being prepared by the department of justice, and it is understood will be filed within ten days. The first of the department's civil suits against war camp contractors were filed last week, and it was intimated then there would be other actions.

Contractor Has Gained 30 Lbs. on Tanlac

"Tanlac fixed me up so I gained thirty pounds. I have never seen or heard of such a wonderful medicine in all the sixty-six years of my life," declared William Magee, well-known retired contractor, 3840 Lafayette Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

"About two years ago I had a severe bladder trouble that left me in an awfully run-down condition. My appetite went back on me and my stomach got so weak I could not eat and digest enough to give me any strength. I also had the worst sort of pains across the small of my back, and could not sleep.

"I began picking up soon after I started taking Tanlac, and now I have a fine appetite, sleep like a log and that tired, worn-out feeling has all left me. I could not do otherwise than recommend Tanlac."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. —Advertisement.

MANY PROBLEMS IN TARIFF

Knotty Points Concerning Rates of Duty That Have to Be Dealt With Judiciously.

Cakes, folding pocket scissors, marble statuary, oriental rugs, pineapples in brine, and bibulous paper, alias "blotters," are a few of the articles with which the Court of Customs Appeals will have to struggle this winter, according to the calendar of cases it has issued. The tariff gives rise to many highly technical questions that are calculated to make the most judicial mind dizzy, and which have a real significance in dollars and cents to some one. An example is the pending question whether wheat screenings are dutiable at 10 per cent as a nonenumerated manufactured article or are free as wheat. What will happen when shipments of 23,000 pounds of goats' beards, reported as passing through the Panama canal, reaches the customs there is no telling. Only those who go down to the sea in ships and make land at the customs house have an adequate idea of the oddities of international trade and the problems they present.—The Nation's Business.

Amounted to Same Thing.

Two children were playing in a garden, and had just started a new game.

"I know a fine game," said Harold, suddenly. "Let's be admirals and command all the ships in the navy."

His playmate, a little girl, at once began imposing conditions.

"All right," she said. "Only I must be the highest admiral and give commands to you."

Harold didn't like the idea, and said so. The little girl thought for a moment.

"Then," she said, "let's play that I'm the admiral's wife. That will do just as well."

The Stakes.

A well-known New Jersey doctor was playing golf with an equally well-known New Jersey minister.

"What shall we play for?" asked the former.

"Why, it is rather out of my line to play for anything," the minister replied.

"Well, we ought to play for something," insisted the doctor, "so I'll put up a pill if you put up a prayer."—Boston Evening Transcript.

The Tonic.

Mrs. Smith (thoughtfully) — I'm afraid I shall have to stop giving Tommy that tonic the doctor left for him.

Mr. Smith (anxiously)—Why, isn't he any better?

Mrs. Smith—Oh, yes. But he has slid down the banisters six times this morning, broken the hall lamp, two vases, a pitcher and a looking glass, and I don't feel as if I could stand much more.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Rolla Potter and Nora Potter, his wife, mortgagors to the Farmers State Bank of Grygla, mortgagee, dated July 24, 1917, with Power of Sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 30, 1917, at 2:00 P. M. in Book 84 of Mortgages on Page 408, which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter assigned as follows: Farmers State Bank of Grygla to Northwestern Trust Company, dated August, 1, 1917, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, August 28, 1917, at 1:00 P. M. in Book 850 of mortgages on page 251; Northwestern Trust Company to H. H. Parkhouse dated August 14, 1917, and duly filed for record in the said office November 14, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock A. M. in Book 103 of mortgages on Page 505; which default consists in failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of $60.00 interest coupon falling due July 24, 1921, and in the payment of other principal and interest since falling due. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000.00 principal and $60.00 interest coupon with interest on both amounts at six per cent per annum since July 24, 1922, and the sum of $60.00 interest coupon with interest thereon at six per cent since July 24, 1921, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One thousand one hundred forty-six dollars ($1146.00) and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now, therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Northeast quarter (NE1-4) and the East half (E1-2) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section eight (8) in Township One hundred fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth principal Meridian for Minnesota in said Marshall County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said county at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren in said county and state on the 16th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1146.00 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements provided by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

VOL. XII. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY DECEMBER 15, 1922 NO. 32

Send in that news item to-day before you forget all about it.

Mrs. Sollom has been visiting at the A. L. Carlson home this week.

Emil Simonson returned Wednesday from a business trip to Spooner.

H. A. Fosholm visited over Sunday with his daughter at Thief River Falls.

Dr. Mellby was called Monday to see John Udstrand who is sick with kidney disease.

Farm, Stock & Home free for a year to our subscribers who pay up and a year in advance.

Leo Horien is now prepared to do team livery driving day or night to all the nearby towns.

Herbert Johnson went to Thief River Falls Wednesday to see his sister at the hospital.

Mrs. Henry Wendt of Middle River came Wednesday to visit her sister, Mrs. Ben Docken.

Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Swanson returned home Tuesday from a couple of weeks visit in Grygla and vicinity.

Miss Gladys Sorum of Thief River Falls visited Monday and Tuesday with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Sorum.

For only five cents extra, you can get this paper and five magazines for $1.55 by paying up for this paper and a year in advance.

Mrs. H. Pavek and two little sons left Monday for their home at Tolley N. Dak., after a pleasant visit here with relatives and friends.

Our High school girls' basket ball team drove to Middle River Tuesday to play the girls' team at that place. The score was 1 to 8, in favor of the latter.

Geo. Ellis accidently cut his face with an axe while chopping wood Tuesday and was obliged to go to Thief River Falls to have a physician dress his wound.

Mr. Bjerk and son, Hardy, went to McIntosh Friday to attend the funeral of his son-in-law, Albert Mathison. Mr. and Mrs. Bjerk returned home Monday accompanied by their little grandson, Myron Mathison who will attend school here.

The great farm paper of the north Farm, Stock & Home, will be given free for a year to all who pay a year in advance for this paper.

Mrs. and Mrs. Edwin C. Johnson's 16 year old daughter, Anna, was taken very sick with appendicitis last Sunday. Her mother and brother-in-law took her to Dr. Froehlich's office where it was found that the appendix was ruptured. She was operated upon Sunday afternoon and at last reports was getting along very well.

Oliver Davidson and Arthur Sorum arrived home Tuesday from Beltrami County. Arthur started for home last week Monday but his car ran off the grade and he was unable to get it back alone and as he was no where near a house he spent the night in the car and had his feet badly frozen as a result, so that he is barely able to walk a little at present.

Only five cents for five magazines ought to appeal to those whose subscriptions expire in the next month or two, and there are several that expire Jan. 1st. This offer is good for only this month. Delays are dangerous, act quickly before you forget all about it.

Former Holt Girl Married

On Wednesday Nov. 29th. at the Wayne county building, Detroit, Michigan., occured the marriage of Miss Nellie Saastad, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. O. Saastad of Holt, Minn., to Mr. James Burns of Detroit, Mich. The ceremony was performed by Justice Scott.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Ahlborn of Cleveland, Ohio, sister and brother-in-law of the bride and Miss Selma Saastad, also a sister, were the only witnesses.

The bride is well known in this vicinity, having graduated from the Thief River Falls High school in 1918 and taught three years in Marshall County. In June 1921 she left for Detroit where she was employed in the Detroit Lubercator Co.

Mr. Burns whose former home was Paraga, Michigon, came to Detroit after serving in the U. S. Army in France and Germany. He is employed at the Ford Corporation and they will make their home in Detroit.

Boys! buy your sweetheart a box of candy at the Holt Cafe.

Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Holmgren entertained a few friends Saturday.

Clean up, trim up, with a Hair cut and a good smooth Shave, at the City Barber Shop, Holt, Minn

Mrs. Edna Hagglund entertained a party of friends Sunday evening in honor of her sister, Mrs. Pavek.

Mr. and Mrs. Selmer Reierson and baby visited over Tuesday night with relatives in Thief River Falls.

Mrs. Carl Olson was called to Thief River Falls Wednesday by the death of her mother, Mrs. Beerbower.

Farm, Stock and Home is issued twice a month. We give it free to those who pay up and a year in advance.

Oscar and Christine Fosholm returned Tuesday from visiting relatives at Thief River Falls and Silverton.

Mr. and Mrs. Bjerken returned to Mahnomen Saturday after a short visit here with their son, Peter and family.

Mrs. Kautz and Mrs. Mathison and children came Wednesday to visit their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Bjerk.

Mrs. P. L. Anderson invited a party of friends to their home last Thursday night to help Pete celebrate his birthday.

Mixed candies for Christmas trees, candy boxes, all kinds of candies, nuts, apples, confectioney, etc., for the Christmas trade. Holt Cafe.

We had an extra freight Sunday, but none on Monday, on account of the storm. Wonder where the fellow is now who predicted a mild winter?

The Holt high school girls basket ball team went to Greenbush Friday and played the girls of that place a good game, but were defeated by a score of 0 to 6.

Axel Nelson attended the final hearing of the Red Lake drainage project at Thief River Falls several days last week. It is probable that a decision in the matter will be made within a few weeks.

Ole Backlund returned last week Thursday from a weeks visit with his parents and other relatives at Hoffman. Obert Reierson was in charge of the butcher shop during Mr. Backlunds absence.

For Lunches, Candies and all kinds of Refreshments go to the HOLT CONFECTIONERY and CAFE.

Our aim- to Please.

Editorial Notice

Our offer of five magazines with this paper for only $1.55, to all who pay up and a year in advance, will expire Dec. 30. We will be unable to extend this offer and those whose subscriptions soon expire are urged to renew at once.

Notice to Creamery Patrons

On account of Christmas and New Years coming on Mondays, we are changing our cream days for the last week in December and the first week in Jan. to Wednesdays and Thursdays. The reason for receiving 2 days is in case one day should be stormy and cold for some of the patrons living some distance from town.

At this time I want to thank you one and all for the patronage and good support you have given your local creamery during the year of 1922. We will be able to show a small increase over last year, which is our aim for years to come, and I must say that our grade of cream is of better quality than it was a year ago. When you stop to think that the difference in price of butter scoring 88 and 93 is 15 cents and more, why shouldn't quality be your aim just as much as quantity.

Wishing you a Merry Xmas. and a Happy New Year.

P. L. Anderson, Operator.

NADINE LA VITTE

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late 60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting. They are cordially received by the General and his wife.

"Oh, not very much. I am fond of him too, and I believe he is going to be of much help to me."

"Well, I've lost five hundred this morning, but I can stand it. I have ordered the mules hitched up, and am going to drive with you about the plantation. I am going to show you a government here in the delta."

During the drive the old gentleman was talkative, sometimes with the school man's hesitating precision, but more often as the free companion, agreeable rather than discursive. Drace evinced in everything a keen interest, but it was not real. His heart was not with him. It was in New Orleans, in a narrow street where boards were nailed across a door.

From what he had been able to gather from the General and by talking in seeming idleness to boatmen and to men along the River, Drace confirmed the information snatched by Shottle from the label on the Frenchman's wine case—namely, that old Stepho had a haunt somewhere in the neighborhood. A shrewd old negro had said that the outlaw lived in the swamp, in a house built of periwinkle shells. On the opposite shore, and several miles below the General's home, there lay a great wood of cypress and a thick tangle of salt cedar, a sort of everglade, a marsh with hundreds of knoll-islands here and there rising among the bayous. Here was indeed an outlaw's paradise, for Drace was told that not nearly all its lanes and crooked byways of brown water had been explored. Herein he began his search for old Stepho, day after day penetrating farther and farther into this moss-hanging wild. He did not confide in General Bethpage, for his mission was sacred unto himself alone, and by himself alone must it be accomplished.

At his feet in the canoe lay a rope, one end of it a hangman's noose, and he smiled at it, grim and firm of faith. Sometimes his canoe would stall in the carpet of scum. But he forced his way through into a narrow and unobstructed channel. Now he paddled swiftly. In front of him a great alligator arose and sank, the canoe grazing his scaly back. With a shriek great birds flew, flapping low, their long legs stretched out behind them. Drace was armed with a revolver, but did not wish to fire it, caution warning him. When he ceased for a time to paddle, how still everything was!

The adventurer liked to feel that no one had ever been there before. But now suddenly something caught his eye. In the green tangle on a low bank he saw a pole with wires strung to it, a sort of gate. The wires were covered with vines, trained about them. But for what purpose, here in this brushy tangle? He caught hold of a weed and pulled the canoe up closer, took hold of the pole and now he found a lower slat to which the wires were also attached. Farther along he discovered a sort of hinge attached to a snag almost hidden by briers.

"I'll open this gate and see what lies beyond," he mused, drawing the canoe back to the other end. He pulled at the pole, and it yielded. The gate opened, and through the weeds that appeared to have been bent by the passing of a boat, he saw a narrow channel.

It was easy enough to shove through the weeds and to enter the new canal. Soon it broadened, winding about among the enormous cypress trees. Now he came upon a widening that looked like a millpond, except that in the midst of it arose an island of tall cane. It was an attractive sight, and he ceased paddling to look. Slowly he drifted toward the island's shore. He took hold of a cane root and pulled the nose of the canoe hard into the bank. Then he got out, parting the stiff and stubborn cane in a shade as dense as night. But now through this parting hallway he could see sunlight beyond, and knew that he was about to come into an open space. And out into it he looked with a start; for there, a few feet from the edge of the fringe of cane, stood a small house made of minute shells cemented—periwinkles. Its roof was of thatch, the long rushes gathered from the swamp; and about the door was a cypress vine, its red blooms dazzling in the sun. And then a bended cane Drace held was crushed in his hand, for through the door and out beneath the vine came the barbaric rose-maid, Nadine la Vitte.

CHAPTER VII

She did not take fright when she saw him. She was startled, but did not run into the house; she stood dazed, her marvelous eyes in wide stare. Slowly he came forward, gazing, his hat in his hand. He dropped the hat, stooped, caught it up and now stood before her.

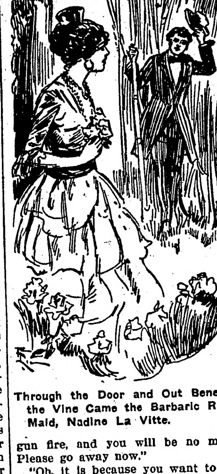
If she were agitated, he could not discover it. She stood where the red blooms brushed her brow. He held forth his hand, and slowly she shook her head.

"Monsieur, how foolish to come! If you do not go now, in a short time you will die. My father! He will shoot you. I should like it not to see you dead, you are so brave. My father, he will think you come for him."

"But I will tell him that I did not. I—"

He moved nearer, but with her hand raised, palm toward him, she motioned him away.

"You do not know what you talk. Nothing could you tell him, for the gun fire, and you will be no more. Please go away now."



Through the Door and Out Beneath the Vine Came the Barbaric Rose-Maid, Nadine La Vitte.

"Oh, it is because you want to get rid of me."

"No, no, no. It is not that. I like you much. You are so brave — and handsome. It is because I fear for you. My father would be angry to have me talk with a northern man. Go now, and for my sake, come no more."

"Mr. Boyce," said Drace then, "is not a northern man?"

She shot a sudden startled look at him. "Mr. Boyce—but he is my father's friend. My father expects me to marry Mr. Boyce. And if my father should come back and find me here talking with you, he would—Please, Mr. Drace, go at once, before it is too late. See, the sun is almost set. The stars come soon, and then through the cane he come. Oh, won't you please be kind to me and go at once!"

"Kind to you? God bless you, I would die for you."

"Oh, you make love soon! But won't you please go now! Quick, I hear something."

"You hear my heart. Let me stay ten minutes, and then I go."

"Ah, but why would you give me ten minutes of fear?"

He saw that her anxiety was real, and his heart smote him for cruelty to this dazzling creature whose father he would hang with a rope brought from the North.

"Yes, I will go. I wanted to tell you something, but my regret at going is so deep that I forget what it was. But I must come again when the sun is not so low. No, tell me please, when that shall be?"

"Never would a man before talk like this to me . . . But if you must come when I beg you no, let it be next Thursday. My father then will be in the hills to buy cattle."

"This is Friday, and that will be a week, lacking one day. You have set doomsday for my return."

"If you come before, you will not find me. And now it is the good-by."

She drew back quickly through the door, and down into the fringe of tall cane he went, parting his way to the canoe that lay nosing the mossy bank.

Only now that she was gone and night had come did he remember—remember that this girl who had bewitched the swift minutes with him was the daughter of his sworn enemy Stepho la Vitte.

A voice called him as he was cursing himself for a traitor to his father's memory. On a point of land he saw three men standing. One of them beckoned him, and he turned in toward them. One of them spoke:

"Would you be kind to set us across? The night he comes, and we would not be lost in the swamp. We will get to the river. Would you, please?"

"Yes, but I don't know that my canoe will hold four. We may get a ducking."

He pulled alongside and steadied the canoe while they got in. Now he paddled carefully. The man who had talked, and whom the other two addressed as Tonez, requested to be set on a bushy shore where the water was so shallow that the canoe was almost stuck in the ooze. With his paddle Drace propped his craft steady, for them to get out. Tonez got out—and with the quickness of a cat snatched a rope from beneath his coat and threw a noose about Drace's arms. Then the two men in the boat threw themselves upon him. There was a hard struggle in the canoe and then out into the water, but they brought him ashore, wound about with the rope.

Now they made haste to tie him securely. The canoe was dragged ashore; Drace stretched out in it, and now they took it on their shoulders and hastened through the tangled underbrush. He had fought hard, but had not cried out. But as he was carried along, he swore bitterly at himself for not looking at first with suspicion on the brutes who now had him in their power.

"Ah, you would steal about and spy," said Tonez. "But you steal about no more. The carpetbaggers, they say, 'You brave?' and you say, 'Yes, I am brave.' Then they say, 'You find old Stepho.' And you go to find him. He is not at home. But his men, they come just in time."

"You are liars. I was—"

"Ah, you come with the joke. Tomorrow, we will laugh. Will you? No, you will not laugh."

. . . .

Drace lay quietly tugging at the ropes that bound him. If he could spring out free, what a scattering he would make of them! They stopped, entering some sort of doorway, and rested the canoe on the ground. Tonez lighted a candle, and Drace saw that he was in an old cabin, almost ready to fall. They rolled him out on the floor, face down, and beneath his arms they passed the paddle of the canoe, so that he could not turn over. Then the others went out, leaving Tonez holding the candle.

"Does the kind gentleman know why they gone? They go to get the dry rushes and the dead bark. For why? To make the fire. It is not cold, no? But they will make the fire of the cabin, and when the morning come, there will be the ashes of the kind gentleman; and the people they will say: 'Ah, he lie down to sleep, and burn up.'"

Drace heard them piling their murderous fuel into a corner. Again he appealed to them, tried threats, told them that his friends would hang them; but they laughed, Tonez bending over him with the candle.

"In a few minutes I light the blaze and take the candle away . . . You talk of Stepho's daughter. Remember she may love me some, too."

"You Spanish devil!"

"The kind gentleman he come close. I'm Portuguese. But no matter. When Stepho come, we tell him what we do, and he pat us on the back and give us money. But the light would hurt the kind gentleman's eyes when he lie that way on his jaw. I will not stoop so low with the candle . . . Oh, what a fine pile they get! It will make the blaze beautiful. All ready, yes? I will touch it off."

Drace could not see him, but he heard the first crackle of the dried rushes, saw the flame dim the candle light. Now he cried aloud, the men laughing, the mounting flame crackling louder. Tonez came back to him.

"We leave you now. You will not need this candle to light you to bed; so I blow it out, see? And I take it with me."

They hastened out, and he heard them laughing as they ran through the underbrush. With all his harnessed might he strove to break the paddle so that he might roll toward the door, but it was strong, and he broke only the tip of the blade. A louder crackling told him that the dry boards above were catching. Soon the roof would fall in; great sparks would fly upward, fall and hiss in the water.

Why should he lie there, seeing all this in his mind, he wondered. He had read that men approaching death sometimes speak foolish words, and here he lay, with his mind on trivial things. Soon he would writhe in a furnace. How all about him glared! He wondered how long it would be before a tongue of flame should lick him with its agony . . .

> "And then he spoke: 'God bless you, Nadine!'"

REPARATIONS PARLEY ENDS

Another Meeting is Scheduled for January 2nd, to be Held in Paris.

DIPLOMATS WORRIED

No Pact Is Signed—England Believes Occupation of Ruhr Valley Would Precipitate Another European War.

London—The London conference on German reparations, generally described as the critical conference, ended in agreement only on another conference. The next link in the long chain of the allies' struggles to get together will be forged at Paris on January 2. There will be a fortnight then left for the allies to agree upon some program.

The moratorium granted the Germans expires January 15, and the next payment on account of reparations, which Germany protests she is unable to meet, will be due on that date.

Britain Opposes French Demands.

Another futile round table session of the diplomats would seem to mean only fulfillment of the French plan for independent action, which British opinion believes would spell calamity for the tottering edifice of European prosperity and sow the seeds for a future great war.

The agreement to disagree—only temporarily, the diplomats assert—was consummated in three days, embracing four meetings of the allied premiers. The rock on which harmony foundered was the British refusal formally to countenance the French project for partial occupation of the Ruhr and important German industries. The British cabinet met and registered its refusal to co-operate wtih France in such measures.

Premier Mussolini's proposals for a settlement were treated courteously, as was due the head of a powerful nation, but were not taken seriously as a panacea for the German sick man of Europe. The German note was rejected unanimously with the general comment that it meant merely sparring to gain time.

LAW BREAKERS HIT TWICE

Court Holds Both Federal and State Authorities Can Prosecute.

Washington—Two cases considered by the government of major importance in the enforcement of national prohibition have been decided by the supreme court. In one of them, coming from the State of Washington, the government scored a sweeping victory, the supreme court holding that both the federal and state government can prosecute and punish the same unlawful act in the manufacture, possession, transportation or sale of intoxicating liquors.

The other case coming from California the government lost in its contention that in the enforcement of national prohibition an executive officer can impose and collect as taxes the assessment and penalties imposed by those sections of the revised statutes whic hremain unrepealed by the Volstead act and which became law while the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquor was not prohibited.

Both Can Punish Same Offense.

The United States district court for western Washington dismissed a federal indictment charging manufacturing, transporting and possession of intoxicating liquors on the ground that the defendants had been tried and convicted in the state courts for the same offense. In reversing this action the supreme court held that "in the absence of special provision by congress, conviction and punishment in a state court under a state law for making, transporting and selling intoxicating liquors is not a bar to a prosecution in a court of the United States under the federal law for the same acts."

DEMS OPPOSE SUBSIDY BILL

Washington — The administration shipping bill was taken up by the senate and was subjected immediately to a baptism of fire at the hands of Democratic opponents.

Senator Jones proposed first that the senate proceed to immediate consideration of the ship bill but objection from the Democratic side blocked this until after the regular calendar had been disposed of. The commerce committee chairman next suggested that the senate meet an hour earlier, but withdrew the propc al in the face of objections.

Clara Phillips Thought Captured.

Casper, Wyo.—In the arrest of a woman who got off the Burlington passenger train from Billings, Mont., Capt. Clayton of the police department believes he has captured Mrs. Clara Phillpis, convicted of the murder of Mrs. Alberta Meadows at Los Angeles. The woman, accompanied by a man, got off the train here and immediately entered a closed taxicab. The motorcycle officers followed her and made the arrest within two blocks. The police announced the description of the woman fits Mrs. Phillips closely.

All She Could Think Of.

One evening, at an entertainment, the mother of a boy in an algebra class I taught turned to me and said, "Well, how is the boy getting along?"

It was my home community and it happened that I was proud of a baby nephew then three weeks old, and I thought, of course, that she referred to him.

I answered, "Just fine; he gained a pound last week"

It didn't take me long to see that she referred to the progress of her son in algebra.

The Christmas Tableau

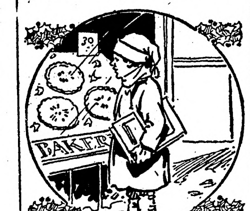
By Christopher G. Hazard

© 1922, WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

JOHN WILSON'S boy could have whatever he wanted, but his father had forgotten something. When Mr. Wilson was a boy himself he had often lingered by the baker's wondow on his way to school and resolved that when he had become a man and had made his fortune he would buy out the baker and have all the pie he wanted; but now, with all his money and all his manhood he had lost his taste for pie and could pass the baker's shop without noticing the tempting display. Mr. Wilson had forgotten that.

It was plain that he had forgotten it, for he had taken John Junior down to the great store on Pearl street and had told him that he could have for his Christmas celebration anything or everything that he saw there, and, when his son had looked things over rather carelessly without wanting anything, he had been surprised. The fact was, however, that Junior, like his father, had already had too much to desire anything further. Junior had never known what it is to be hungry without supply. He had never even had to cry for things. He had lived under an outpouring cornucopia from his first gold spoon all the way on, without the joy of making a cart out of two wheels, an axle and a board, or a henhouse with the remains of a variety of old packing boxes. So that it was very difficult, indeed, to devise a new sensation for young Wilson or kindle a new desire.

With the posturing group of entertainers performing on the snow-covered lawn before the house, however, it was different. They struck attitudes, formed figures, chased each other about, and gave their whole program of tableau with an eye on the following collection and under the inspiration of the hope that it would be a large one. They'd never outgrown a wish or known the full satisfaction of one, their appetites were always keen, and their enjoyment of their small portion of fortune's favors was greater than all the fun that John Wilson and his son together could get out of life.

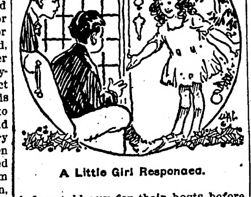


Lingered by the Baker's Window.

The entertainment did bring one new thing into the rich monotony of the Wilson household, however—that of giving a Christmas party to some who would appreciate it and of thus obtaining a new experience for themselves.

The tableau performers were the first to receive invitations, and they were authorized to each invite five of their friends, so that the company that gathered at the Wilson party was a large, as well as a motley one. The selection of the presents had given Junior a sudden and new interest and pleasure at the big store, for the choosing of gifts for others was a novelty to him, and anticipation of their happy surprises had filled his mind with gladness. It was with a real welcome and a hearty handshake that he greeted his guests.

At first the company was rather overwhelmed by the splendors of the Wilson house. Its rich furnishings and dazzling lights made such contrasts that the boys and girls felt out of place and conspicuous. But after the unwinding of the cobweb, the strands of which led each one to a hidden gift, and when the games had made them forgetful of themselves, the joy of it all got into their feet and made them dance, the delight of it all made them sing, and they gathered about the big Christmas tree that beamed and twinkled in a corner of the parlor with an eager expectancy that made Junior a very happy Santa Claus, as he distributed his favors. Then, when the table had been cleared of its dainty refreshments, the leader said that they wanted to give some indoor tableaux for their hosts before they went.



A Little Girl Responded.

So he called first for Madame Melba, and a little girl responded with all the aplomb of a prima donna. Then Signor Caruso assumed a kingly attitude and looked upon the assembly with as much as he could assume of dignity. He was followed by Sir Harry Lauder, who added to his posture a verse of "It's Nice to Get Up in the Morning." This seemed to suggest the idea of going to bed first, and there was whispering about returning home, but one of the guests said they must have a song from Santa Claus before they went. This rather alarmed Junior at first, but he rose to it with a line or two from "Old King Cole Was a Merry Old Soul," which satisfied the demand. Then they all joined hands in a ring and sang the Christmas carol, "Away in a Manger," and so ended the Wilson party.

As the happy shouts lingered on the Christmas wind the Wilson family presented a tableau themselves. Mr. Wilson stood by the window, looking after the departing children. Junior seemed arrested in the act of giving away the joy of the Christmas tree, while his mother paused by the table that gleamed with silver, seeming to feel again a forgotten gladness. The party left such an imprint upon the Wilsons' hearts that they have never since tried to have a Christmas to themselves.

Why Bake At Home
when you can buy bread like it, ready baked?
COUNT the raisins — at least eight big, plump, tender fruit-meats to the slice.
Taste it—see how the raisin flavor permeates the bread.
No need to bake at home when we've arranged with bakers in almost every town and city to bake this full-fruited raisin bread.
Just 'phone and they'll deliver it—all ready to surprise the family tonight.
It comes from master bakers' modern ovens in your city. And it's made with Sun-Maid Raisins.
That's another reason for its superiority. A rare combination of nutritious cereal and fruit—both good and good for you, so you should serve it at least twice a week.
Use Sun-Maid Raisins also in puddings, cakes and cookies. You may be offered other brands that you know less well than Sun-Maids, but the kind you want is the kind you know is good. Insist, therefore, on Sun-Maid brand. They cost no more than ordinary raisins.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given, that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Rolla Potter and Nora Potter, his wife, mortgagors to the Farmers State Bank of Grygla, mortgagee, dated July 24, 1917, with Power of Sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 30, 1917, at 2:00 P. M. in Book 84 of Mortgages on Page 408, which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter assigned as follows: Farmers State Bank of Grygla to Northwestern Trust Company, dated August, 1, 1917, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, August 28, 1917, at 1:00 P. M. in Book 850 of mortgages on page 251; Northwestern Trust Company to H. H. Parkhouse dated August 14, 1917, and duly filed for record in the said office November 14, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock A. M. in Book 108 of mortgages on Page 505; which default consists in failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of $60.00 interest coupon falling due July 24, 1921, and in the payment of other principal, and interest since falling due. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000.00 principal and $60.00 interest coupon with interest on both amounts at six per cent per annum since July 24, 1922, and the sum of $66 00 interest coupon with interest thereon at six per cent since July 24, 1921, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One thousand one hundred forty-six dollars ($1146.00) and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Northeast quarter (NE1-4) and the East half (E1-2) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section eight (8) in Township One hundred fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth principal Meridian for Minnesota in said Marshall County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said county at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren in said county and state on the 16th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1146.00 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements provided by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Dated November 24, 1922.

THE HOLT WEEKLY NEWS

Successor to "The Northern Light"

VOL. XII. HOLT, MARSHALL COUNTY, MINNESOTA, FRIDAY DECEMBER 22, 1922 NO. [illegible]

We wish all our readers a very Merry Merry Christmas.

Candies, nuts, apples, etc., for Christmas at the Holt Cafe.

Mrs. Erick Erickson was a Thief River Falls visitor Tuesday.

Send in that news item to-day before you forget all about it.

Mrs. P. O. Reierson visited over Sunday with relatives in Thief River Falls.

S. S. Kolden of Middle River was a Holt visitor a couple of days last week.

Miss Irene Wegge came home from Crookton Wednesday to spend the holidays.

Mrs. Swan visited Friday and Saturday with relatives in Thief River Falls.

Martin Olson came from Fosston Wednesday to spend Christmas at the Nyberg home.

Oliver Davidson returned to Beltrami county Saturday to continue trapping for awhile.

Mrs. John Simonson went to Thief River Falls Saturday to visit relatives and friends.

Mrs. S. A. Holmgren was given a surprise party Saturday night by several of her friends.

The 12 year old son of Mrs. [illegible] was taken to the state institution at Faribault, Tuesday.

C. L. Heinse and son Harry are expected home from Thief River Falls to-day to spend Christmas.

Mrs. Docken and children went to [illegible], Minn., yesterday where Mr. Docken is [illegible] a general store.

O. E. Sovde has had a couple of very nice booths put up in his confectionery store for the benefit of his patrons.

Buy your Xmas. candy, nuts, apples, candy boxes and also mixed candy especially for Christmas trees at the Holt Cafe.

T. Ellestead, Mrs. O. H. Nohre and their mother returned Tuesday from visiting relatives in western North Dakota and report very cold weather in that country.

The great farm paper of the north Farm, Stock & Home, will be given free for a year to all who pay a year in advance for this paper.

Miss Alida Johnson came home Saturday from Minneapolis where she has been staying with her sister and attending school. Her sister Mabel who lives at Alexandria accompanied her home.

For only five cents extra, you can get this paper and five magazines for $1.55 by paying up for this paper and a year in advance.

A. H. Nieter of Minneapolis was here yesterday on business in connection with the Marshall County State Bank, of which he is vice-president. Mr. Nieter states he is well pleased with their business and prospects here.

Yesterday was the shortest day of the year and now the days will slowly grow longer. We hope that the old saying, "As the days begin to lengthen, the cold begins to strengthen," won't hold good for we have already had lots of North Pole weather this winter.

Only five cents for five magazines ought to appeal to those whose subscriptions expire in the next month or two, and there are several that expire Jan. 1st. This offer is good for only this month. Delays are dangerous, act quickly before you forget all about it.

Merry Christmas

"Christmas comes but once a year, with all its Brightness and Good Cheer."

It seems as tho' if people would live right, that the good cheer of Christmas time would last throughout the whole year, instead of just a few days.

If people and nations would heed the teachings of Him, whose birthday we are about to celebrate, we then would indeed have "Peace on earth and Good Will toward men."

Until these things come to pass we will still have wars, internal strifes, troubles, strikes, etc.

A great amount of the trouble is caused by the craze for both money and pleasure.

"What shall it profit a man if he gains the whole world and looses his own soul?"

"What shall a man give in exchange for his soul?"

Nazareth Lutheran Church.

Choir practice at T. E. Ellestead's at 8:15 Friday night. A team will be ready to leave from the Mickelson hotel at 8, with the singers.

Notice to Creamery Patrons

On account of Christmas and New Years coming on Mondays, we are changing our cream days for the last week in December and the first [illegible] for Wednesdays and Thursdays. The reason for receiving 2 days is in case one day should be stormy and cold for some of the patrons living some distance from town.

At this time I want to thank you one and all for the patronage and good support you have given your local creamery during the year of 1922. We will be able to show a small increase over last year, which is our aim for years to come, and I must say that our grade of cream is of better quality than it was a year ago. When you stop to think that the difference in price of butter scoring 88 and 93 is 13 cents and more, why shouldn't quality be your aim just as much as quantity.

Wishing you a Merry Xmas. and a Happy New Year.

P. L. Anderson, Operator.

"YOU SCORPION!"

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting. They are cordially received by the General and his wife. Drace penetrates into the wilderness, discovers Periwinkle House and finds Nadine alone. She is much alarmed and warns him her father will shoot him. He makes love to her and to get him to go she agrees to meet him again the following Thursday. On his way home Drace is accosted by three men who ask to be set across the river. They overpower him and bind him with ropes. Led by Tony they throw Drace into an old cabin. Tony taunts Drace and avows his love for Nadine, while the others collect fuel. Tony sets fire to the cabin and the three go off laughing.

And then something touched his hand, something cold and swift. A knife cut the ropes that bound him; and in his great and sudden joy Drace almost lost his reason. But he did not cry out; no word was spoken. Just one look, and then he screened her from the flames as they fled through the door, out through the light, into the shadow of the trees. And then he spoke: "God bless you, Nadine!"

He had held her hand, leading her as they ran, but now in the shadow safe from danger, she withdrew it from him, and when he reached again to take it, she shook her head.

"No, it must not be. I told you to go quick, but you did not go quick enough. Then Tonez he see your boat, and with the others, he wait for you. I run around and I watch him, with the knife to stab him if he hurt my brave friend. Then in dim light I see them carry the boat, and I think they have killed you; and I steal along to stab, but then I know you are in the boat. All I do then was to watch till they go, and then I go in. It was not hard to do. No."

"You are an angel."

She laughed, shaking her head.

"Angels do not go into the fire. They do not belong there . . . Now, I tell you. I show you the crooked way, through the woods and out to the river. The moon has come, and we can see. If you know the way, you are safe; but if you do not, you mire down and die in the ooze, and not in the flame. You would please follow me now."

He followed her, hoping that she might be slow, to prolong the joy of his being with her, but she was agile, walking swiftly. Sometimes she would turn slightly about to warn him of a dangerous place, and once she smiled, the moon full in her face. "Tell me," he inquired then: "What has passed tonight, I hope, does not change what was set for Thursday."

The land was beginning to rise, and she was walking faster.

"Thursday you may come."

She halted in an open space and pointed toward the river.

"The bird, I hear him sing now. The magnolia trees are over there. And now it was again good-night."

She gave him no chance to detain her, for in an instant she was running; and he stood looking till in the deep shade her form was lost.

Old Stepho had not come home when the Creole girl reached the house in the swamp. She sat down to think and to listen to his footstep. He did not come; and undressing, she lay down, mused a long time and slept . . . A knocking on the door and Stepho's voice called her:

"The sun he was high, but the leetle gel she sleep."

Soon she came out, and he drew her to him and pressed his sandpaper cheek against the coil of her hair.

They sat where the house threw its cool shade. Slowly he rocked in his big chair, looking up at the cane that hid his home.

"This air, he good. He comes through salt marsh from the Gulf, with not the malaria. You bloom always like the flower."

"But, Father, when do we leave here? It must not be that we are here to live all the time?"

"Ha! The little bird wish to leave the nest, to try her wings? That is the way of birds and women. Soon, I suppose, you will wish to marry some fine man and leave your old father."

"No—it is not that. I love you . . . But it is lonely here, and—"

"Mr. Boyce, he is a fine young man. If you marry him, you would not so much leave me. I see him often. He buy from me the mules and cattle which I bring down from the hills. Why you no wish to marry him?"

"But I do not love him."

"You would soon learn; he is a fine young man. I owe him much; and he know much about my business that he would keep quiet about if—if he was of the family. And he would take you often to the city and give you rich dresses and diamonds."

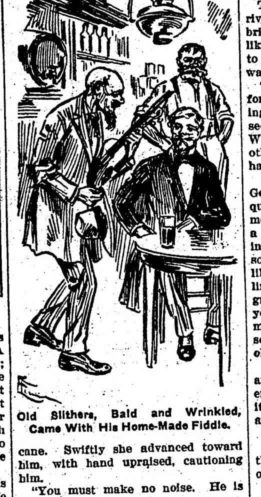
"My dresses they are fine enough. I have the diamonds, too. But you must know that I get lonesome here. I cannot play with the book all the time . . . You are going again to buy cattle in the hills, are you not?"

"I will buy them, yes."

"And you must on Thursday go to the hills?"

"Yes, on the Thursday, I will go."

He fell asleep, for he was tired; and when the sun came about, she drew his chair into the shade. He opened his eyes, patted her hand and slept again. She heard a slight sound, and looking, saw Tonez coming through the cane. Swiftly she advanced toward him, with hand upraised, cautioning him.



Old Slithers, Bald and Wrinkled, Came With His Home-Made Fiddle.

"You must make no noise. He is asleep."

"But I have come to tell him that the carpetbagger spy he gone to come back not again."

"Go away, and you can come back and tell him."

"No, I stay and talk to you."

Stepho's voice called out. "Tonez, come. I am here."

She did not wish to hear them talk. She looked at the Portuguese and mused as she walked away: "You do not know, you scorpion, how close you come to the stab. Your time will come, and I watch you."

CHAPTER VIII

It was a long time before Drace found a boat to set him over to the opposite shore. It was so late when he reached the Bethpage place that he did not go up to his room. The house was so quiet, the hounds themselves asleep, that he stole into the garden to pass the remainder of the night on a couch in the summer house. The air was heavy with roses breathing in through the lattice, and as he straightened out, grateful for repose, this thought came to him:

"Pale they call death, but to me it will ever be red. And I have looked into its red countenance, and was not afraid. I thank God that He gave me that strength. . . . But what a melodrama!"

At the breakfast table, Tycle, with mother tenderness, upbraided Drace for sleeping out for fear of arousing the house. Afterward Drace and the General strolled out under the trees.

"By the way," the General said presently. "I have an engagement to deliver an address before a teachers' meeting in Natchez, and I should much like to have you bear me company. We can leave this evening on the Black Hawk and reach there early in the morning."

"I'd like very much to go," answered Drace. "But can we get back before Thursday?"

"Easily by Wednesday morning. Anything important for Thursday?"

"Oh, no. An old fellow down at the ferry wants me to go fishing with him Thursday, and I gave him my word that I'd be on hand. Most remarkable old man, full of fun; quite a character."

"You must mean old Spence. But are you sure it is not that pretty daughter of his that attracts you? You'll have to be a little careful, my son. We may associate with men out of our social running, but not with women. . . . Ah, Tycle! Mr. Drace has just consented to give me his company to Natchez."

. . . .

The Black Hawk's band played a welcome, and the captain came down the plank to conduct the General on board. From a quiet, lazy and almost deserted landing the place leaped into the full throb of life. Negroes and shiftless whites came from their hovels to gaze upon the magic splendor of this journeying palace, and the three-shell man stepped ashore to gather up dollars.

Dinner was a state occasion, and after it, the ball. Then their staterooms—then morning, and Natchez.

The address was to be delivered in the afternoon, and when the time came the General led him over to the hall to hear the speech, imprisoned him without bail in a corner, and there he had to sit. The address was long, academic and dull, and the sufferer mused:

"I don't see why Shottle ever called you a remarkable character."

Everybody came about the General to take his hand. Young women told him that they had never been so thrilled. Drace lied to him, too, swore him an orator.

"Let us walk off alone," said the General.

Slowly they walked at first, but after a time the old gentleman struck a brisker pace, toward the River.

"Now, my boy, as we've got through with those beaters of dust out of old carpets, we'll have some fun. Old Colonel Pemberton wanted me to go home with him, and he has a delightful house, a gracious wife and handsome daughter, but I had to decline. I've stood about as much now as I can. We'll go down to old Tobe Mason's tavern, under the hill. Tobe is a gentle old fellow, never killed but three men."

The tavern was as tough a place as river men could make it. Built of logs, bricks, stone and clapboards, it looked like an architectural stagger, trying to climb the hill. In the main room was the bar.

"Well, I'll be knocked in the head for a steer!" old Tobe cried out, stumping toward the General. "I haven't seed you since the River tuck fire. Well, well! Thinkin' about you the other day. . . . Glad to shake your hand, Mr. Drace. Set right down."

"Tobe, I'm glad to see you," said the General. "And fetch us about two quarts of that summer-grape wine. Let me tell you about it, Drace. We have a wild grape here that gets ripe along in August. It's much larger and is not sour like the fox-grape, and its vine likes to climb about a sassafras sapling. And then you see an umbrella of grapes. Now don't say a word till you've had a good taste of it. Tobe makes it himself, and he'll fetch us some that's at least twenty-five years old. Here we are."

The wine was as red as blood, cool and yet warm. Its flavor was the ripened sweetness of the spirit of autumn, it was as mellow as the scent of the apple at harvest time.

"What do you think of it, hey?"

"Uncle Howard, are you sure that this was not made by Bacchus instead of Tobe?"

"Good, my boy! Enjoying yourself?"

"Yes, I'm doing fine, General. You see, I can't express myself as well as you can. I haven't as much to draw from. You've not only book-knowledge but experience, worth more socially than all the libraries in the world."

"You hit it off well. But what is better than it all? Moral freedom. This table here is rough, with one rheumatic leg slightly drawn; these chairs we sit in, bottomed with strips of hickory bark, would be scorned at a sheriff's sale; but sir, Mark Antony, in his first triumph, his chariot drawn by lions, was not more regal than we are at this moment, enthroned and sceptered with moral freedom. Pour out, for as that same Antony said: 'Scant not my cups.'—Tobe, where's that old scoundrel who used to play 'The Arkansaw Traveler'?"

Tobe stumped his way over from the bar.

"You mean old Slithers?"

"That's the man. What's become of him?"

"Nothin'. And I reckon he's playin' right now down at Cadman's joint, that ought to be wiped off the earth. Want him?"

"Need him, Tobias. Send a boy after him."

Old Slithers, bald and wrinkled, came with his home-made fiddle. The General greeted him warmly, introduced him to Drace; and the most comfortable chair in the house provided him, he sat down to play the famous old tune and to recite the dialogue, improvising where his memory failed him.

. . . . .

"That, my dear Drace, was Stepho la Vitte."

Christmas Gifts

All wrapped in tissue paper and tied with ribbons bright,
Hidden in my bureau drawer—the one that's locked up tight—
Are Christmas gifts for all my folks, how surprised they'll be!
'Course they're only little things, I'm not quite eight, you see.

A handkerchief for Grandpa, I hemmed
it ev'ry bit;
A bag for Grandma's worsted, you know
she likes to knit;
Some armlets for my father, pink 'lastic,
with a bow;
A crocheted mat for Mother with scalloped edge, you know;

Scrapbook filled with birds and beasts
for little Brother Don;
Reins for Baby Eleanor with jingly bells sewed on.
They're wrapped in tissue paper and tied
with ribbons bright,
Hidden in my bureau drawer—the one that's locked up tight.

THE CULTIVATED CHRISTMAS TREE

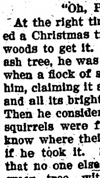
BY CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD

© 1922, WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

ONCE there was a boy named Peter Mephibosheth Onondaga Cologos Cadwalader. It was such a long name that he would get out of sight before his mother could finish calling him, so she shortened it into "Pete." "Oh, Pete," or "You, Pete."

At the right time of year Pete wanted a Christmas tree, so he went to the woods to get it. Selecting a mountain ash tree, he was about to cut it down, when a flock of starlings disputed with him, claiming it as their Christmas tree and all its bright berries as their own. Then he considered a nut-tree, but the squirrels were furious and wanted to know where their Christmas would be if he took it. So the boy concluded that no one else would want the evergreen tree, with nothing on it but cones, and took that.

Reflecting, however, that his tree did not seem likely to have anything on it worth while, Peter remembered what an old woodman had once told him about a wild tree that had responded wonderfully to cultivation, and resolved to see what could be done in his own case. His mother smiled when he made his plan known, but offered no objection as her son set the tree up in a box, supplied it with earth and enrichment and watered it from day to day. His frequent inspections did not much reward his hope; indeed, the tree seemed to be withering, and yet, on Christmas morning, there it was, all adorned and well supplied with gifts as beautiful as a barberry bush.



It was strange, however, that withal there did not seem to be much happiness among the branches. Indeed, before long, Peter seemed as dissatisfied and fretful as though his tree had borne him nothing more than its wild cones. His mother felt a good deal disappointed, for she had hoped that so wonderful a surprise would be as happy a thing for him as it had been for her; but she could think of nothing better, so that the Christmas celebration began to seem like a failure. Mr. Cadwalader, however, had a suggestion to make. He said that he thought that the tree had not been cultivated enough, and that if Peter would invite some of his young friends in he thought they might get a good deal of pleasure out of things even yet.

When the little company had assembled and Mr. Cadwalader had distributed some packages that he had placed on the tree there was a merry time over the games that he knew how to play, and a wondering when he disappeared into the hallway, promising to come back all dressed up in a minute and take the three gifts off that were left on the tree and see what they were and who they were for.

They hardly knew the jolly man who came back, after a little, all in red, with white whiskers and paper snowflakes in his hair and on his coat, as though he had come in out of a snow storm. Little Dorothy Avery, the smallest of them all, jumped up and leaned on her crutch as she exclaimed: "I know him, he's a friend of mine," mistaking him for Santa Claus, but the older ones did not correct her mistake.

Whoever he was, he made them a little speech and wished them a merry day and began to take off the three remaining gifts. In his speech he said that he felt sure that there must be a good deal of happiness on that tree, because God had made it, hope had planted it in the box, faith had watered it, affection had filled it with fruit, but, as they had not yet had the best things that cultivation could produce, he was now going to let them have them.

The first of the three gifts was a small box, all done up in tissue paper. When Dorothy had taken off the paper and undone the box there was another little box, and when she opened this box there was another little box in that, then there was another little box, then there was another little box, then there was another little box, then there was another little box; and so it went on until, in the last box, she found a gold dollar. The second gift was a bayberry candle, with these words on a piece of paper:

Set me in the window some dark night,
Many will not see me, someone might.

Madeline got this second present and seemed very glad of it. Then the third gift was taken down and presented to Peter. It was only a note, all done up in an envelope, but it helped him to see why the party had made him happier than he had been when he was all alone with his tree, for he could not only read the note, but also the sweet meaning when it said:

All trees are Christmas trees that bear
The care of love and love of care.
To cultivate a Christmas tree
Plant it in love and let it be.
Gold for misfortune it will keep,
Light in the darkness it will give,
Its truth will blossom while you sleep,
Its happy kindness while you live.

So Peter found out all that the old woodsman had meant when he told him about cultivating trees.

Raisin Quick Candy.

One and one-half cupfuls sugar, ½ cupful chopped raisins, ½ cupful roasted almonds.

Heat the sugar in frying pan over a low fire, stirring constantly until it becomes a golden brown sirup. Remove from fire and quickly stir in raisins and nuts. Pour on inverted ungreased pans. As it is beginning to harden mark into squares.

PACK GIFTS WITH CARE

CHRISTMAS PRESENTS SHOULD BE WRAPPED WELL.

Parcels to Go by Mail and Express Need the Careful Attention of the Sender.

IT IS all very well just to wrap an ordinary package in paper and tie it securely with string, but with a Christmas gift it's different. Somehow the Christmas sentiment oozes out even to the outside of the package, and we must take just as much care in "doing up" our parcels as in making or buying them in the first place.

Let us be practical, however, first of all. Let us wrap the parcels, especially the ones which have to go by mail or express, very securely indeed, registering them if they are valuable. Tissue paper first, and then good, strong wrapping paper, tied with stout cord or heavy elastic, is the best method. Reserve ribbons and fancy cards for the inside of the package, and remember that putting a seal over the fastening of a parcel prevents its being sent third class. For perishable objects use cardboard boxes.

As for the packages which are to be delivered in person, however, or the inside of those to be sent by mail or express, you may exhaust your ingenuity to make them pretty. With a box, of course, it is always easy to use holly tissue paper and green and red ribbon and a sprig of holly or mistletoe; but a wrapped parcel always looks more clumsy.

Wrap the gift first in white tissue paper; then roll it in white bristol-board; and then cover it with green or red crepe paper. Tie around it a bow of ribbon in the contrasting shade, stick through this a sprig of holly and a card of good wishes, fasten at the ends with Christmas seals, and there you are!

These seals, by the way, although they may be purchased very cheaply, still have a further touch of individuality when made at home. Do them on glazed paper and coat them, before cutting out, with mucilage that can be allowed to dry and then wet again when necessary. Three suggestions for designs are the bell and star, the Christmas tree with presents and Santa Claus with his pack. Many more to be drawn, touched up with watercolor and cut out, will suggest themselves to the reader.

The very ribbon with which your gifts are tied can be stenciled with a design more original than the inevitable holly of the shops. The red border and the mistletoe wreaths and stars make one pretty pattern. The process is the simple one of ordinary stenciling.

With your gift send some pretty card expressing your affection for the recipient. A good idea, especially with a book or some other gift of the sort, is to send instead of a card a little blotter calendar. It consists of two or more blotters tied together with a bow of holly ribbon, a calendar pad for 1922, and a picture (a post card will do, but the subject must be suited to your friend's tastes) fastened to it on the other side. The fastening may be done by clips or by sealing wax. A slip of paper with a Christmas greeting should also be added. The blotters may be red and green or they may give the colors of some club or college in which the donor or recipient is interested.

Finally do not forget to weigh all packages you mail. Nothing is more annoying than to have to pay for a package sent out by some careless friend. And keep a card catalogue of your Christmas presents. Then you will avoid the two pitfalls of forgetting some one or duplicating a gift—both horrible to contemplate.

Removing Water Spot.

Some silks and wools are spotted by water. A satisfactory method for removing such spots is to dampen the entire material evenly and press it while still damp. Either sponge the material carefully with clean water or shake it in the steam from a briskly boiling tea kettle until it is thoroughly damp, then press it.

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

St. Vincent—Turkeys are the best paying crop a man can raise in this section, providing he can protect them from the wolves.

Winona—Hannibal Choate, 87 years old, a veteran Winona merchant, observed the 61st anniversary of his firm.

Austin—At a recent public sale near here some cows were sold for $125 each, and corn sold for as high as 66 cents a bushel.

St. Paul—The state this week received $33,003.24 inheritance taxes on payment of the settlement on three Minneapolis estates.

Mankato—In a competitive hunt held by the Mankato Lodge of Elks, two teams brought in 196 cottontail and eight jack rabbits.

Windom—The city of Windom will work in conjunction with the state highway department in the matter of bridging the Des Moines river here.

Duluth—Dr. M. N. Triplett, aged 68, pioneer physician, newspaper publisher and former editor of the Floodwood Broad Axe, is dead at his home here.

Duluth—Jessie Dennerly, a pupil, is recovering from burns received when two alcohol lamps being used in the chemical laboratory were overturned and exploded.

Albert Lea—Hans P. Jenson, residing north of here, who was severely burned when he attempted to revive a fire by pouring gasoline onto it, died at a hospital here.

St. Paul—St. Paul police completed installing a powerful radio receiving set at Central station, to be used in picking up descriptions of criminals and stolen automobiles broadcast from Chicago and other eastern cities.

Willmar — The Kandiyohi County War Records committee has announced the publication of a war records book which will show the services of Kandiyohi county in the World war.

Minneapolis—Action was started in Hennepin county district court to collect thousands of dollars in personal property tax on automobiles in the hands of Minneapolis automobile dealers.

Duluth—Because two men each claiming her as his wife, had met and quarreled, Mrs. A. M. Johnson went to the lake docks and attempted suicide by shooting herself. Her recovery is doubtful.

Minneapolis—Three brothers began a search for a will in Minneapolis which will give them claim, they believe, to 40,000 acres of Northwest farm lands, valued at upwards of a million dollars.

Tracy—At the John Peterson farm south of this city, an old fashioned husking bee was conducted when Peterson's neighbors gathered and husked 670 bushels of corn and stacked his corn fodder.

Minneapolis—Celebrated Minneapolis Week with the announcement that it passed Los Angeles and Pittsburgh in November postal receipts, and now ranks 11th among postal centers of the United States.

St. Paul—Reports of a statewide plot to destroy schools, colleges and universities by fire were partly confirmed when state fire marshals said the $500,000 Winona Teachers' college fire Sunday, Dec. 3, was of incendiary origin.

Winona—A three months' search which enlisted the services of authorities in many cities ended when Archie Moore, 15-year-old Winona high school boy who disappeared from his home last September, was located at Vancouver, Wash.

Austin—As if she had a premonition of death, Floy Naoma Earl, 4 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Earl of this city, who died as the result of eating rat poison, a few days before death told her mother she was going to join her brother Charles in heaven.

Albert Lea—Reports coming from citizens who visited Lower lake, a section of the state game preserve, Sunday, are that hundreds of mallards, teal, spoonbills and other ducks are being found on the ice and along the soil line. It was at first believed that the ducks were wounded by guns but on examination very few were found with any wounds. It is now believed the city sewage dumped into the lakes poisoned the water, and the ducks, eating the vegetation, having been made the victims.

St. Paul—Prohibition agents, during November made 161 arrests in Minnesota and confiscated 11,000 gallons of whisky and whisky mash, according to figures made public by S. B. Qvale, state prohibition director.

Pipestone—Plans are being made for a celebration here April 19, in honor of the memory of Henry W. Longfellow, the poet, and his daughter, Alice Longfellow, of Cambridge, Mass., has been invited as the honored guest of the occasion. The celebration is being planned because of the association of Pipestone with Longfellow's famous poem, "Hiawatha"

BANK BANDITS STEAL $200,000

Guard Is Killed at Door of Mint While Resisting Hold-up—Real Battle Staged.

ONE ROBBER IS SHOT

Most Daring Holdup in Colorado History Takes Place at Door of Denver Mint—Sawed-off Shotgun Is Clue.

Denver, Colo.—Every peace officer in Colorado is combing the highways leading from Denver in search of the masked bandits who shot and killed Charles Linton, guard of the Denver branch of the Kansas City Federal Reserve bank, stole $200,000 in paper currency and escaped after waging a gun fight with armed guards on duty at the United States mint. The money was being transferred from the mint to a delivery truck of the reserve bank standing at the curb and was in fifty packages of $4,000 each. All of the money was in $5 denominations.

The only tangible clue that the police have on which to work is a bloody sawed-off shotgun which was picked up in the street about a half block away from the mint, where it had been dropped from the fleeing car. The gun was loaded and the shells were filled with extra size buckshot.

Chief of Police Williams has announced that clews that might result in the capture of the bandits probably would be secured by means of finger prints found on the gun.

Police expect to be aided in their search for the escaped bandits by the fact that one—apparently the leader—was shot seriously, if not mortally, by a government guard on duty at the mint as the bandit turned to fire a final volley at the guards as the car sped away from the scene of the holdup. An automobile carrying seven men, two wearing masks and one dropping over the edge of the machine, bleeding profusely, was reported to police as having been seen speeding northward out of the city shortly after the robbery. Police riot cars were dispatched in pursuit of this car.

Biggest Robbery in Colorado.

Denver police unhesitatingly declared the robbery was the largest and the most sensational daylight holdup ever executed in Colorado.

All patrolmen and detectives of the local police department have been armed with riot guns and are being assisted by county and federal authorities.

The disregard of the bandits for human life marks the robbery, according to police, as one of the most determined in police annals. With sawed-off shotguns, two of the bandits bombarded the front door of the mint as they leaped from their automobile. Fifty government employes, summoned by an alarm bell, seized shotguns and rushed to the doors or windows of the mint, shooting at the holdup men, who returned the fire and at the same time calmly proceeded to load the fifty packages of currency into their own car.

FOUR DEAD IN LAKE STORM

Wireless Is Broken After Sending Single Message.

Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.—Four persons lost their lives when the tug Reliance was wrecked in a storm on northern Lake Superior. A wireless message from the tug Gray, which, with the Favorite, went to the rescue of the 27 persons aboard the Reliance, said all had been accounted for except the four, who were swept from the decks of the small craft as efforts were being made to launch lifeboats in the high seas.

Those drowned were Captain John McPherson of the Booth Fisheries, a passenger on the Reliance; Fred Regan, Gus Johns and an unidentified man.

Johns was a member of the Reliance's crew and Regan was a forester in the employ of the Superior Paper company.

After being marooned for five days on Lizard Isle, in Lake Superior, with the temperature hanging well below the zero mark, 23 of the 27 missing persons from the tug Reliance have been rescued by the tugs Gray and Favorite.

The wrecking of the Reliance was the result of a gamble with fate. After lying to in a sheltered cove for three days, Captain Williams found his supplies of food and fuel exhausted. The mariners elected to breast the blizzard rather than chance death from starvation.

Tuberculosis Reduces Average Life.

According to recent statistics prepared by the National Tuberculosis association, two and one-half years would be added to the life of each individual in the United States if tuberculosis were eliminated as a cause of death. During the past 17 years the death rate from the disease has been reduced exactly one-half, but there are still more than 1,000,000 cases of tuberculosis in the country. Tuberculosis workers, encouraged by the results of their efforts, are planning a more intensive campaign for the coming year in order to spread further education regarding the disease among the public, as it is their conviction that it can in time be entirely eradicated.

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES
Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.
Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.
Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.
In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.
Nujol is prescribed by physicians; used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Rolla Potter and Nora Potter, his wife, mortgagors to the Farmers State Bank of Grygla, mortgagee, dated July 24, 1917, with Power of Sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 30, 1917, at 2:00 P. M. in Book 84 of Mortgages on Page 408, which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter assigned as follows: Farmers State Bank of Grygla to Northwestern Trust Company, dated August, 1, 1917, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, August 28, 1917, at 1:00 P. M. in Book 850 of mortgages on page 251; Northwestern Trust Company to H. H. Parkhouse dated August 14, 1917, and duly filed for record in the said office November 14, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock A. M. in Book 103 of mortgages on Page 505; which default consists in failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of $60.00 interest coupon falling due July 24, 1921, and in the payment of other principal and interest since falling due. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000.00 principal and $60.00 interest coupon with interest on both amounts at six per cent per annum since July 24, 1922, and the sum of $60.00 interest coupon with interest thereon at six per cent since July 24, 1921; being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One thousand one hundred forty-six dollars ($1146.00) and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Northeast quarter (NE1-4) and the East half (E1-2) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section eight (8) in Township One hundred fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth principal Meridian for Minnesota in said Marshall County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said county at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren in said county and state on the 16th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1146.00 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements provided by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Death of John Nelson

Joen Nelson was born in Sweden, Dec. 18th, 1838.

He came with his family to America in 1869 and started farming in Marshall county in 1886.

Mr. Nelson had been sick for a couple of weeks when the end came peacefully on Friday night Dec. 22nd., at the home of his daughter, and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Transtrem, 3 miles north of Holt.

The funeral services was held at the family home on Wednesday, Rev. Myhrer officiating, and the interment was made in the Folden cemetery.

MOST IMPORTANT NEWS OF WORLD

Big Happenings of the Week Condensed for Benefit of Busy Readers.

Washington

Washington—Action on the resolution proposing a constitutional amendment prohibiting the future issuance of tax exempt securities is scheduled in the house.

Washington—Both retail and wholesale food prices increased 2 per cent or more during November, according to figures made public by the Department of Labor.

Washington—Nearly half the exports of corn from the United States in 1921—or 58,582,806 bushels—went to Canada, according to the United States Department of Agriculture.

Washington—A subsidy for American producers, industrial and agricultural, was proposed by Senator Brookhart, Republican, of Iowa, as an amendment to the administration shipping bill.

Washington—Pierce Butler's nomination to be associate justice of the supreme court of the United States was favorably reported by the senate committe on judiciary. The vote was unanimous.

Washington—Senators interviewed were virtually unanimous in the opinion that the administration should withdraw the remnant of the American army of occupation from Germany with the least possible delay.

Washington—Expenditure of $70,000,000 among famine sufferers in Germany and Austria by the United States government was urged upon the House by Representative Newton, Republican, Minnesota, who introduced a resolution to that effect.

Washington—Discussion of rural credits legislation before the senate banking and currency committee in the last week has developed a decided trend of sentiment for framing a composite bill embodying features of both the Lenroot and Capper bills.

Washington—Unless some reductions are made by railroads in rates on agricultural products, Secretary Wallace of the agriculture department testified before the Interstate Commerce commission, there will be a general readjustment of industrial and agricultural production in the United States.

Washington—The house judiciary committee appointed a subcommittee to investigate what action, if any, should be taken in connection with the refusal of Representative Oscar Keler (rep., Minn.), to testify before the committee as to the information on which he based his impeachment charges against Attorney General H. M. Daugherty.

Domestic

Omaha—The bones of a thousand prehistoric cannibals are sticking out of a big hill near Tekamah, Neb., a few miles above Omaha.

Superior, Wis.—A delegation of Superior business men is in Washington to enter a formal protest against appointment of Oscar Dahly, Duluth, as collector of the port at the head of the lakes.

Mitchell, S. D.—Miss Alice Lorraine Daly, Nonpartisan league candidate for governor last November, did not personally spend a cent in her campaign, according to her campaign expense account filed here.

Westby, Wis.—Kenneth E. Ekern of this place, is dead as a result of an injury received when he was struck on the right leg by the crank of an automobile which "kicked" as he was starting the car some months ago.

New York—An appeal will be taken to the courts to unseat Senator H. C. Lodge of Massachusetts if the senate committee on privileges and elections of the new congress delays hearing the petition filed contesting his re-election Nov. 7.

New Brunswick, N. J.—Governor-elect George S. Silzer of New Jersey, declared that he would urge the grand lodge of New Jersey to take positive action to put the Masonic order on record as being opposed to the Ku Klux Klan.

Livingston, Mont. — Because she thought strike sympathizers were about to attack her father, Pearl Kinsley, 14 years old, appeared in the state court to answer a charge of firing into a crowd of alleged sympathizers here late in November.

Brookings, S. D.—Flax was the only major crop in South Dakota which, at market prices quoted Dec. 1, showed a profit to the farmers over and above the cost of production, according to the statistics compiled by the state department of agriculture.

Marion. Ill.—With the opening of the second week of the trial of five defendants charged with murder in connection with the Herrin riots, the state prepared to present evidence regarding the slaying of C. K. McDowell, foreman of the strip mine around which the riots centered.

New York—"The sensational rise in sterling during the last few days indicates that events of far reaching importance are taking place in the international markets," the Wall Street Journal says, commenting on the rise of the British pound to $4.69—within 17 cents of par.

Marion, Ill.—The march of several hundred armed men, driving before them through the streets of Herrin six blood-stained prisoners and then later finding of 20 bodies, was described to the jury by several witnesses at the trial of five men in connection with the riot.

New York—Motor vehicle production reports to the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce show the total output for 11 months of the year to be 2,344,000.

New York — Edward Donesan, Brooklyn bootlegger, who claims to have made $1,000,000 selling liquor, was taken to the Atlanta federal penitentiary to begin serving 10 years for conspiracy and grand larceny.

Chicago—Oscar E. Bradfute of Zenith, Ohio, was elected president of the American Farm Bureau federation. J. H. Howard, the retiring president, refused to be a candidate and condemned politics in the organization.

Los Angeles — The anti-Volstead quacking of 300 geese recently led to the arrest of O. S. Steglatt at Cudahy, according to local prohibition agents, who confiscated three stills, 100 gallons of moonshine and 300 gallons of mash concealed in coops of the chickens and geese at Staglatt's residence.

Philadelphia—The battleship Iowa, veteran of the Spanish-American war, recently passed down the Delaware from the local navy yard on its way to Hampton Roads, there to be put in final shape for its last voyage to join the twilight fleet of the American navy—those obsolete battleships which have ended their existence as targets for the guns of their comrades afloat.

Sporting

Ironwood, Mich.—Hunting fatalities in the upper peninsula of Michigan this year showed a big decrease compared with last year and the year before.

New York—Ban Johnson, president of the American league, launched an attack on gambling in major league ball parks in the joint major league meeting.

New York—Major league baseball magnates in joint session jammed the brakes on late-season sales and thus checked, for a time at least, the outcry against the "buying of pennants."

New York—Eugene Criqoni, feather weight champion of Europe, has been signed to meet Johnny Kilbane on Decoration Day. The fight will probably be staged in Paris.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Walter Rehg, veteran outfielder for the Indianapolis American association baseball club, was traded by the management of the local club for Al Ellis of the Louisville Colonels.

Paris—Georges Carpentier, former light heavyweight champion of Europe, said he would sign a contract to fight Battling Siki late in March. The agreement will be for 20 rounds with four-ounce gloves.

Bloomington, Ind.—Indiana university's 1923 varsity football team will be made up to a large extent of material from this year's freshman squad. Twelve members of this season's squad will be lost by graduation.

Des Moines, Iowa—Eleven members of the Drake university football team, which finished the season tied with Nebraska for first place in the Missouri Valley conference, will be missing when the roll is called next fall.

Lafayette, Ind.—Thirteen members of the Purdue university football team wore a boilermaker uniform for the last time when Purdue and Indiana met here November 25, making the end of the Western Conference gridiron season.

Chicago—At a special meeting of faculty representatives of the Western Conference held at the University club, it was voted to rescind the action taken on Dec. 2 and permit Big Ten athletes to compete in the National Collegiate A. A. track and field games to be held on Stagg field in June.

New York—The Baseball Writers' Association of America indorsed the action of its New York chapter in refusing to recognize Ty Cobb's 1922 batting average as .401 because of alleged arbitrary action by Ban Johnson, president of the American league, in crediting the Detroit manager with a hit in a game here May 15, although the play was recorded as an error by the official scorer.

Foreign

Berlin—At the recent elections in Finland 19 women were elected members of the riksdag.

London—A plan to harness the winds and make them produce electricity for rural districts has been presented to the ministry of agriculture.

Moscow—Just as last year Russia experienced its food crisis, Russia is experiencing an industrial crisis this winter. Serious efforts are being made to save the mines and factories from collapse.

Tokio—Industrial unrest with increasing unemployment continues to grow in Japan, and along with it is a decided growth in extreme socialism and a drift among the repressed leaders toward communism.

Tokio—The Osaka financial district is seriously shaken as a result of three suspensions and many runs on small institutions. The Bank of Japan has promised to come to the assistance of other banks in difficulty.

London—The financial world here is still mystified by the strong advance of the pound sterling.

Athens—The death penalty for those speculating in flour is among the rigid terms suggested for stabilizing economic conditions here.

Lausanne—Although Turkey was conciliatory on the question of accepting some form of supervision from without on the treatment of the Christian population inhabiting Turkey she proved adamant in insisting upon the deportation from Constantinople of the supreme patriarch of the Greek Orthodox church.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Wheaton—Accidentally shot by her 5-year-old son, Mrs. Emil Simonson, living west of here, is in a local hospital in a serious condition.

Glenwood—Building of the large stock barn on the fair grounds here by the Pope County Fair association is nearing completion.

Hastings—Dedication of the new armory here will take place Dec. 22, it was announced.

Rice—Eighteen tubs of butter weighing 60 pounds each, were stolen from the Farmers' Co-operative creamery here. Clues are scant.

Collegeville—St. Thomas college is to rank as a university when a college of law is added in time for enrollment of students in September, 1923.

Duluth—Edward Clark, 11 years old, was instantly killed near Duluth Heights when he fell from a school bus and was crushed under the wheels.

Minneapolis—Sales of forget-me-nots on downtown streets brought approximately $8,000 for the aid of disabled veterans and their families who are in need.

Two Harbors—More than 150 railroad trainmen attended the annual banquet of Stoneburner lodge, Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, and ladies' auxiliary here.

St. Paul—Minnesota produced 30,700,000 tons of iron ore during the last year, of which 5,695,910 tons were dug from state-owned land, Ray D. Chase, state auditor, reported.

Minneapolis—A tuberculosis survey of Minneapolis to discover the actual prevalence of the disease in the city will be launched in 1923 by the Hennepin County Tuberculosis association.

Sherburn—With the intention of joining zealously in the state wide fight on tuberculosis among cattle, the Martin County Cow Testing association was organized at a meeting here.

Windom—Charles Hammel of Windom, who bought a pint of liquor from a stranger and retired to an alley, while in Minneapolis, to take a drink, was slugged and robbed of $150, he told police.

St. Paul—Courts have no jurisdiction under the corrupt practises act to determine election contests for members of the legislature, according to a ruling by District Judge J. C. Michael in St. Paul.

Fergus Falls—After seven years a silver dollar with the name of Raymond Aarvig of this city, chiseled upon it, has returned to the parents of the former owner, who was killed in action in France.

Barnesville—C. G. Dosland of Moorhead, defeated candidate for state senator from Clay and Wilkin counties, has instituted proceedings for a recount of the ballots cast in the November election.

Red Wing—Country and city residents will join in protest at the hearing before the state railroad and warehouse commission in the near future, when proposed increases in telephone rates are discussed.

Fergus Falls—United States District court opened here with Judge Andrew Miller of North Dakota occupying the bench in place of Judge Page Morris, who is busy handling liquor cases in St. Paul.

Minneapolis—Edward L. Maher was arrested and held in $10,000 bail on charges preferred by S. H. Holt of the Children's Protective society, which Mr. Holt said were based on a story told him by a girl, aged 13.

Winona—Alfred T. Stearns, 93 years old, one of the oldest residents of St. Charles, Minn., died at his home, slightly more than a week after he and his wife celebrated their sixty-eighth wedding anniversary.

Red Wing—The two platoon system will be inaugurated in the Red Wing fire department Jan. 1. Thereafter the men will put in 11 hours on one shift and 13 on the other, instead of being on duty 24 hours a day.

St. Cloud—About 30 alleged liquor law violators from Stearns county are hailing with joy the fact that they will escape the wrath of Judge Page Morris, when they are arraigned in federal court at Fergus Falls.

Waseca—At a meeting of the official board of the Methodist church, the pastor, Rev. C. H. Miller, announced the donation to the church by Mrs. J. B. Dye, of a set of Deagan tower chimes. The chimes cost $5,000, exclusive of the tower.

Redwood Falls—Recently the state supreme court reversed a decision of the district court of Redwood county, which is said to be far-reaching in its importance. T. J. Frederick contracted to construct a county ditch, and during construction heavy rains washed sediment into the ditch, partly filling it. The contract was requested to clean out the ditch before the county would pay him the balance due, which he refused to do. The county won the case in the district court.

Waseca—The Waseca city council has offered a reward of $100 for information leading to the arrest of an unidentified motorist who struck David Dahl, and continued without stopping to see if his victim was hurt.

Minneapolis—Pledging co-operation with federal narcotic agents in combating the increasing use and sale of drugs in Minneapolis, H. M. Gardner, vice president of the Civic & Commerce association, at a conference declared steps would be taken to create public sentiment favoring rigid reinforcement of narcotic laws by both state and federal courts

PERPETUAL YOUTH

by CHRISTOPHER G. HAZARD

©1922 WESTERN NEWSPAPER UNION

TIME, to be ever young, is born again
With every year, and thus he flaunts his youth.
Were he incarnate once alone, sure then
He evidently would be old, in truth.

Thus is he envious, yet all his frost
But pales the crimson banner of the rose;
It laughs upon his spiteful labor lost,
Renewed in fragrances when winter goes.

Nor knows the urchin the interior star
That, all untouched by him, will yet attain
Its heaven, and from its glorious heights afar
Will twinkle down and smile at him again!

Nineteen Twenty-Three

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

THY friends are all importunate
That this year may be fortunate,
They weave a special wishing spell
About this year to guard it well;
Lest any harm should come to thee
Because old Time says "Twenty-three!"
Grace and good cheer attend this year
And rout all shapes of doubt and fear.

But it will be well not to put too much faith in resolutions. Resolutions are often the vapors of auto-intoxication. They are the rainbows that succeed the last storm, before the tears have dried up. They are the halos that we place upon our heads too soon. They are the thin ice that glitters but lets us through.

There is more power in resolution. If a man can overcome himself he has conquered his worst enemy. He will have to use both fists to knock himself out and both feet to kick himself out; he will have to get himself down and sit upon himself before he can be himself.

This is worth while, but it is unpleasant and difficult. Resolutions are apt to fall before it or be entirely forgotten, but resolution can do it and have force to spare. As a poet has said:

So nigh is grandeur to our dust,
So near is God to man,
When Duty whispers low, Thou must,
The youth replies, I can.

Household Resolutions for Father

I WILL not sin. Never again will I touch the guest towel, for I have seen the error of my ways, and now know that guest towels are to be seen but not used; yea, not even for a newly shaved face.

I will reverence the parlor. Verily, verily, no cigar stumps nor ashes shall I leave behind me, nor shall I lay my head upon the sacred embroidered cushion.

I will reform. The socks that are taken off at night, even so shall they be picked up by me and put into the laundry basket.

I will be thankful. For the cut glass berry bowl and the mahogany sewing table, for the synthetic toilet lotion, for the belligerent cigars; for these Christmas gifts, will I show rejoicing.

I will not answer back. Yea, though the bills of the New Year morn are mighty as mountains, and I will walk in the shadow of bankruptcy, I will not lift my voice against thee.

I will not complain. No, though goulash and croquettes be handed to me even unto the third evening, I shall hold my peace, and my desire for porterhouse shall be no more.

I will not struggle. That good-will may abide throughout the coming year, I cheerfully resolve to obey all the rules of the institution which harbors me. Amen.

NOBLE PURPOSES COUNT

Cut out the long string of New Year resolutions and substitute for them a few strong, noble purposes.

Happy, Though Older

(©, 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

NOT by mourning because life cannot be all springtime. Not by thinking that youth can be powdered, painted, dressed and affected into renewal. Not by looking backward and living upon reminiscence. Not by counting up our losses.

In fourfold beauty life is on the wing. As well try to change the course and succession of seasons as to hold back the progress of our ages. Spring, summer, autumn, winter are not only for nature, but for human nature. No one is deceived by imitation when we are not just as young as we used to be. Fading pictures and a passing show, "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," are just the differences in life's weather.

But every season has its own peculiar beauty. Every day of every year is really a gem on Time's finger. There is even a majestic and terrible beauty in a storm. In the long monotony of the doldrums at sea one could hail a cyclone. In the dusty glare of protracted drought a flood could be welcomed. In too much of any season the wish arises for the rest of the program. Change opens up new vistas of the scenery of our histories. The afternoon of life is meant to be a pleasant outlook upon its harvest fields, a gathering in of that wealth of production that requires time and patient toil. The enjoyment of that richness of character that is given only to long experience. Wisdom can never be hastily acquired. Nothing can be done in less time than it takes. Even God must wait until fall for a ripe apple.

Age marks progress and gives leisure. To look forward and go on with power of choice hitherto denied, and to have time and opportunity to do as one likes, rather than as he must, these are much. To have acquired new powers of thought and to have time for books, to hobnob with a few cronies, to have a little something to do, to sit on the porch and see the world go by, to look beyond the setting sun to a new day, and beyond the coming winter to a new spring—all these and more may mean that age has kept the best wine until now!

THE CALENDAR

By MARTHA B. THOMAS

THE calendar is a curious human document when you stop to think about it. Just an easier way of reckoning than the counting of moons and suns, and a very important matter it is, too. A calendar is the director of man's affairs, the "consulting engineer" always to be interviewed before arranging life, whether it is a dinner or business appointment, a siege with the dentist or a trip abroad. It is the grand reference book; a silent, inanimate thing composed of twelve pages or sections with black marks on them. Probably no other book, large or small, has as many readers or commands the respectful interest enjoyed by its unimpeachable reputation.

JOHNNY HAD HIS MISGIVINGS

Dear little Johnnie's Aunt Emma, a lady of most generous build, had come for a visit and dear little Johnnie had been gazing at her raptly for some minutes. Finally he could stand it no longer.

"Mamma," he cried, "does Santa Claus fill everybody's stockings?"

"Of course, dear," replied his mother in some surprise.

"Grown-up people's, too?"

"Yes, dear."

"Well," returned Johnnie doubtfully, but as one clinging to a shred of hope, "I hope he gets to mine first."—The American Legion Weekly.

Merchant Now Eats Anything on Table

"By the help of Tanlac I have overcome a case of nervous indigestion I had suffered from for ten or twelve years," is the emphatic statement of Norman W. Brown, well-known wall paper and paint dealer, of 213 N. Cedar St., Charlotte, N. C.

"My stomach was always out of fix and everything disagreed with me. I was troubled with heartburn and dizziness, and at times there was a pressure of gas around my heart that almost cut off my breath.

"Since taking Tanlac my digestion is fine. My appetite is a wonder and I eat just anything I want. In fact, my stomach acts and feels just like a new one and my nerves are as steady as a die. To put it all in a few words, I am just the same as a new man. It's a pleasure for me to tell my friends about Tanlac."

Great Fishing Preserve.

Our greatest fishing preserve is a reputation that is assured to the Yellowstone park, for the park service, aided by the bureau of fisheries, last season restocked its lakes and streams on a larger scale than ever before. Eggs of native trout collected in the park numbered 5,996,000; 2,871,000 of these, developed to the stage of eyed eggs and fry, were returned to the waters there; to these were added from outside hatcheries sufficient to bring the total planting to 4,051,000, or double the number planted in 1920.—Scientific American.

"Why, God made them, of course."

Whereupon Doris, in much astonishment, exclaimed:

"NADINE!"

SYNOPSIS.—The time is the late '60s or early '70s and the scene a steamboat on the Mississippi river. All the types of the period are present and the floating palace is distinguished by merriment, dancing and gallantry. There are the customary drinking and gambling, also. Virgil Drace, a young northern man, is on his way south on a mission of revenge. He meets an eccentric character in the person of one Liberty Shottle, who is constantly tempting the goddess of chance. They agree to a singular pact. Drace, seeing an opportunity to use Shottle, confides to him that his mission is to find a certain ex-guerrilla, Stepho la Vitte, who had murdered Drace's father. It is his determination to hang La Vitte as high as Haman. Drace falls in love with a striking young beauty on the boat. The steamer reaches New Orleans, at that time in the somewhat turbulent throes of carpetbag government. The young men attend the French ball and Drace unexpectedly meets the girl. She is accompanied by one Boyce, apparently her fiance. Shottle learns that the name of the girl is Nadine la Vitte. Drace passes an uneasy night torn by the suspicion that Nadine is the daughter of old Stepho la Vitte, now an admitted outlaw. Now, more than ever, is he resolved to find where the girl lives and to find Stepho. Drace and Shottle begin a search of the city. Drace takes a hand in a carpetbagger riot. He catches a glimpse of one he is sure is Nadine. Drace and Shottle get into bad standing with the authorities, and are given until the next day to board a steamer bound north. Returning to the house where he thought he had glimpsed the girl, Drace finds the place abandoned. Shottle discovers that a case of wine on the steamer is addressed to Stepho la Vitte at Farnum's Landing, Mississippi. It is the next stop below Bethpage's Landing and General Bethpage is Liberty Shottle's uncle. They decide to visit him. Liberty goes broke again and swears off again on betting. They are cordially received by the General and his wife. Drace penetrates into the wilderness, discovers Periwinkle House and finds Nadine alone. She is much alarmed and warns him her father will shoot him. He makes love to her and to get him to go she agrees to meet him again the following Thursday. On his way home Drace is accosted by three men who ask to be set across the river. They overpower him and bind him with ropes. Led by Tony they throw Drace into an old cabin. Tony taunts Drace and avows his love for Nadine, while the others collect fuel. Tony sets fire to the cabin and the three go off laughing. Nadine rescues him and agrees to meet him again.

The General roared his delight, said that he would go on the stand to swear against Sour Socrates in favor of the fiddler's dialogue. "Tobe," he shouted, "fetch in the buck-and-wing dancers."

Tobe went to the door, yelled as if calling hogs; and in came two big negroes, a throng of idlers following them. At it they went, shaking the house, and when weariness threatened to seize them, for refreshment they drew off, and leaping, butted their heads together like goats. After a time the General gave them a dollar apiece, dismissed them—gave the fiddler five, with an order to play that old tune again. Old Tobe was now lighting his evening lamps. The General called to him.

"Toby, what have you for supper?"

The old fellow closed one eye.

"'What have I got?' he says. Ah, that's it. An' I'll tell you. I've got hoe-cake and roasted doves."

"No, you don't mean it!"

"Hoe-cake and roasted doves, I said."

"Good, by Gideon's Band. Fetch us, Tobias. And mark you, along with it all bring about a trowel full of that wild plum jelly.

The doves and the strips of bacon and the hoe-cake and the jelly came on, and arising the General saluted the repast.

"Talk about quail! Quail, sir, is insipid, white, dry and tasteless compared with the dark richness of the dove. And look at this bread, made of mealed pearl. You never tasted any bacon like that, my son, fed on acorns showered down from Olympus. . . . The sweet of the night!"

They had finished the meal and were sitting back, smoking, sipping wine, when Drace noticed a sudden change in the General's countenance, a tightening, a grimness; and turning about, he saw standing against the wall a strange figure—a man not tall, but broad of shoulder, his body sloping lithely down to feet expressively of sinewy restlessness. His mass of hair was like tangled flax straw, dark and yet gray. Like the bristles of a wild boar, his short mustache stuck out and his heavy eyebrows looked like great hairy caterpillars crawling across his lower forehead. In his dress there was a wild touch, a barbaric aspect. Slowly he came forward.

"This is General Bethpage, heh?"

"That is my name, yes. What do you want with me?"

"Whut I want; heh? I come to 'pologize to think them mule be mine."

"Well, go on away. I don't want any apology from you."

"No? You put pistol at me. That was in Louisiana. This is Mississip'. An' I tell you here you haf turn' carpetbagger."

"What! If General Andrew Jackson should arise out of his grave and tell me that, do you know what I would say to him?"

"You would beg hees pardon as you will mine, heh?"

"I would say to him as I now say to you: You are an infamous liar."

Drace sprang between them and seized the man by the wrist; a dirk fell from his hand.

"Stand back, General," cried Drace. "There is not going to be a fight here. Stand back, Tobe!"

The dark-faced man looked Drace in the eye.

"Monsieur was ver' strong. But—I see him some other day."

Turning, the fellow made off.

"Now, who the devil was that?" asked Drace.

"That, my dear Drace," replied the General, "was the fellow you asked about the other day—Stepho la Vitte."

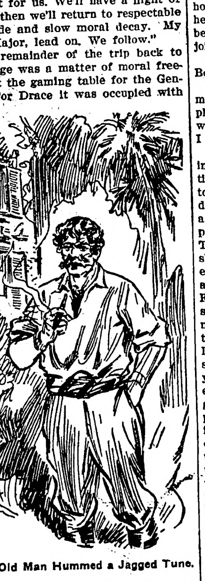
To Drace this encounter with Stepho la Vitte, the father of the girl he loved—and the outlaw upon whom he had sworn to wreak vengeance—was disturbing indeed. The General, however, was not at all upset by the fact that he had been barely saved from Stepho's knife, and when a short time later they boarded the Bumblebee on their return, he gripped Major Pewitt's hand and said:

"Major, Mr. Drace and I have in our precious possession three quarts of old Tobe's wild grape."

"Ha—which is as much as to say that you have three quarts stewed out of the heart of Venus. I'll find Hawkins and the four of us will gather in the Texas and—and flatter the stars, by gad! But Tobe lied—said he didn't have any of the old stock left."

"And a liar's wine is sweet, my dear Major. Come, Virgil, my boy, put all brooding out of your mind. Brooding is for the poet when the nag is tired, and not for us. We'll have a night of it, and then we'll return to respectable servitude and slow moral decay. My dear Major, lead on. We follow."

The remainder of the trip back to Bethpage was a matter of moral freedom at the gaming table for the General. For Drace it was occupied with the hot struggle between thoughts of his grim mission against Stepho, and his longing for Nadine. For the time being, however, the beautiful girl who had rescued him from the burning hut triumphed. She had promised to see him once more on Thursday. He would keep the tryst.



The Old Man Hummed a Jagged Tune.

Presently the Bumblebee made Bethpage Landing. And the General's hospitality was at once so warm and so gracious that Drace felt no hesitancy in remaining for the time being under his roof—until Shottle's return, at least. That night after dinner when his wife, Tycie, had left, the old gentleman lit a cigar and for a long time sat smoking in silence; and Drace was silent, too, looking through the lattice at the moon, love's slow timepiece stopped and stagnant in the sky.

"Virgil?"

"Yes, General."

"Have you a pistol, sir?"

"No; I had one, but I lost it."

"Well, provide yourself with another. In saving me from a deadly assault you have mortally offended old La Vitte. He is in no wise afraid; but neither is he gallant, and would shoot you without warning. You told me, you remember, of your appointment to meet old Spence tomorrow. I haven't any too much confidence in him; he might play you into the hands of Stepho, and I advise you not to go fishing with him."

"Spence. No that's not the name of the old fellow I'm going with. His name is—Spilliers, I think."

"I don't know a man of that name in the neighborhood. But, anyway, arm yourself and keep a sharp lookout."

And then they sat and smoked in silence, inhaling the dewy breath of the night.

CHAPTER IX

With the first gleam of Thursday night Nadine arose and stood looking out from the window. Her father had come in late and was to depart again early for the hills, but she was afraid lest he might have changed his mind. She heard him moving about, but she waited a long time before she went to meet him, so sweet it was to stand there at the window to catch the first ray of the sun.

The old man hummed a jagged tune; in a garden of melody it would have been a briar. Nadine came out, and gallantly he kissed her hand, laughing softly; and then as was his wont, he kissed her hair.

Her duties about the house were light, but he helped her, and when their queer assortment of plates and dishes, gold-rimmed china, crockery, stoneware and tin plate had been washed and put away, they sat in the shade of the house, the girl anxious and wondering.

"I have sent Tony back to the ceety, as I tell you I will," he said to her. "He does the good work to burn the spy, the carpetbaggair. Now he have spree, with the red wine an' the white. When the time come, he be back. I have need of heem with the cattle that I buy. He drive them . . . Up to the town Natchez I have trouble. The ol' scoun'rel Bethpage! I go in the tav', an' he is there, sing, laugh, eat an' look at the darky dance. I wait. Then I go up. We have words. He jump up. Then the young man, big, he grab my wrist like this. He squeeze. I say: 'Monsieur you was ver' strong, I see you again.' An' when I do, I keel heem. I hear old Bethpage call him Vergeel. The old man I keel too, eh?"

"Oh, no—no!" she cried . . . "Let us go away somewhere. They will never let you alone. It will be better to be in the city than here."

"Just a little while longer we stay in this place, eh? Then we meet Monsieur Boyce in Memphis, an' you marry him, an' he take you away for the honeymoon, per'aps to France. An' he buy you the silk dresses, an' many beautiful things. An' then I come and join you, an' we all live happy—eh?"

"But—but I do not like Monsieur Boyce!"

"Ha! You learn soon. He is a fine man. Wait till we see him in Memphis an' you know him better. You will love him then, an' be happy. . . . I go now. Au revoir, ma p'tite."

Stepho went down to his boat, feeling that he had outwitted her impatience of the swamp, and she ran back to her room to gaze through the window. But soon she came out with a big leatherbound book of plays and put it on the ground beneath the oaks. Then with a broom made of stiff twigs she swept the ground, unstrung a caterpillar swinging down and carried it away out of the range of her stage. From the house she brought a narrow strip of rush matting, spread it beneath a tree, raising one edge as if to form of it a sort of back, a sofa. From the house she brought a box, to serve for a table, and from out beyond the palisade of cane she gathered lilies, plucking from the bank a great bloom that looked like a trumpet. These she hung on the low-swaying branches of her playhouse trees, or with sharp thorns pinned them to the rugged back, a curtain to drape the wall above her "pretend-like" divan. She sat down and waited a long time. The cane stirred, and she seized her book, opened where a lily-stem marked her favorite play, and made herself believe that she was reading.

It was only a breeze that rustled in the cane. She could hear it now, lisping amid the glossy leaves above her. Why should she be impatient? She could wait. Had she not waited night after night for her father's footstep? Had she not sat in the house, alone and not afraid, when the storm tangled the tops of the cypress trees and lashed the bayou mad? . . . She had not heard a sound, but looking by chance, she saw Drace coming through the cane, and she sprang up to meet him, the play-book pressed against her bosom.

"Nadine."

"Monsieur!"

"Don't call me 'Monsieur.' Call me Virgil."

She dropped her book. He bent to pick it up, but she snatched it from beneath his reaching hand and stood back from him.

"Oh, it was you, then! It was you the so strong man that would break my father's wrist. It was you!"

"Nadine, it was not to hurt him. With a knife he would have killed an old man; and then they would have hanged him. Nadine, my other hand held yours, to protect you."

"It must be true. I will believe you—Virgil. I know you brave and not wish to hurt an old man. No, you could not do that. You will forgive me, yes?"

She held forth her hand and taking it tenderly, he touched it with his lips; and like a princess she accepted the homage due her rank and her beauty.

"Come, now, we play," she said, sweetly laughing. "And it must be free, like the boy and the girl. But first you sit down here and tell me."

> "And do you know what I said to myself? I said: 'You are to be my wife.'"

BROADWAY AN INDIAN TRAIL

Present Famous "Bright Light" Pathway Used as Artery of Trade by the Aborigines.

Weckquaesgkew Path is the Indian title which was given to the road through Manhattan island now known as Broadway. The long, curious name is that of a tribe which once occupied the upper end of the island, and it signifies "People-of-the-Birch-Bark."

So well was the street planned that centuries later modern engineers discovered that it was almost impossible to improve upon the original Weckquaesgkew path, which followed the easiest grades through the hills of upper Manhattan. Broadway, however, was not laid out as a warpath. It was a regular artery of trade, and was used by the Indians for generations.

Some of the Indian homes in caves on the side of the Inwood hills and similar ones on the north side of Harlem river are still in existence. Large quantities of oyster shells were found in the caves, and these oysters must have been brought from many miles away.

The Whole Story.

Foolish Advice.

The man had skidded on the slippery bridge and gone over into the river, crashing through the ice. A passerby noticed him floundering around in the chilly water and shouted:

"Keep cool and I'll save you!"

"Well," chattered the victim, "if I was as sure of your being able to save me as I am of my keeping cool I would quit saying my prayers this minute."

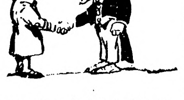
Harbord Leaves Army Staff for Radio



DECEMBER 20 Maj. Gen J. G. Harbord, deputy chief of staff of the army, will retire from active service to become president of the Radio Corporation of America, to which post he has just been elected by the board of directors succeeding Edward J. Nally. In making public General Harbord's retirement the War department announced that he will be succeeded as deputy chief of staff by Maj. Gen. John L. Hines now commanding the Eighth army corps area at Fort Sam Houston, Tex. In his letter to the secretary of war asking for retirement, General Harbord said:

"Whenever occasion has offered during nearly thirty-four years of service, I have been an advocate of opportunity for the younger men of the army. At this time of elimination, by congressional action, of hundreds of officers from the career to which they had dedicated themselves, I feel that my retirement thus saving some man to the army who would otherwise be lost to it, and affording promotion to younger officers for whom I step aside, is but consistent."

In approving the application of General Harbord for retirement, the secretary of war made the following comments:

"General Harbord's retirement is a loss to the active forces of the army which cannot be adequately expressed. We have not had in our military service, or in our government service in any capacity, a man of higher qualities or one who has inspired in others a greater degree of confidence."

General Harbord's military career has been striking.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Rolla Potter and Nora Potter, his wife, mortgagors to the Farmers State Bank of Grygla, mortgagee, dated July 24, 1917, with Power of Sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 30, 1917, at 2:00 P. M. in Book 84 of Mortgages on Page 408, which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter assigned as follows: Farmers State Bank of Grygla to Northwestern Trust Company, dated August 1, 1917, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, August 28, 1917, at 1:00 P. M. in Book 850 of mortgages on page 251; Northwestern Trust Company to H. H. Parkhouse dated August 14, 1917, and duly filed for record in the said office November 14, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock A. M. in Book 108 of mortgages on Page 505; which default consists in failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of $60.00 interest coupon falling due July 24, 1921, and in the payment of other principal and interest since falling due. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000.00 principal and $60.00 interest coupon with interest on both amounts at six per cent per annum since July 24, 1922, and the sum of $60.00 interest coupon with interest thereon at six per cent since July 24, 1921, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One thousand one hundred forty-six dollars ($1146.00) and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Northeast quarter (NE1-4) and the East half (E1-2) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section eight (8) in Township One hundred fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth principal Meridian for Minnesota in said Marshall County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said county at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren in said county and state on the 16th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1146.00 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements provided by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Seventy-eight ($78.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Harold M. Hicks and Emily A. Hicks, his wife, Mortgagors, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 16th day of July 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 23rd day of July 1919, at one o'clock P. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 130.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, to Helen S. Winton by written assignment dated the 26th day of July 1919, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 6th day of August 1919, at Two o'clock P. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages on page 562.

And Whereas, The said Helen S. Winton, the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 ($1398.28) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from the 21st day of December 1922, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of section Thirty-four (34); and the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of the Northwest Quarter (NW1-4), and the West half (W1-2) of the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing One Hundred Sixty acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 10th day of February 1923, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

She led him to her "sofa" and they sat down, leaning back against the tree.

"Tell you what, Nadine?"

"About the great big world you know so well."

"I don't know the big world, as you think it. But I know the universe as I feel it. It is here."

About her finger she sat wrapping the lily-stem that had marked her favorite play. Was it that she did not understand his reference to his universe? No, for she shook her head, and with a sigh that did not mean weariness.

"The universe could not be on this little island."

"It could be held in your dimpled hand."

"Oh, my hand dimpled!" She held it in front of him, touched his brow with the palm.

"It is not soft enough to be dimpled, Virgil."

"I would kiss it soft."

He caught her wrist, touched the tip of each finger with his lips and then kissed the palm. She laughed, drawing back her hand.

"You must not do that. We must talk of other things."

"Yes, but first let me tell you of my dream."

"I do not like to hear dreams. We always forget them and make up something we did not dream. . . . But did you not tell me once?"

"No, I don't think so. In my dream you touched my heart with a torch and set it afire."

"But I would not do that. I would save you from the fire. Ah, and Tony he has gone to the city, but when he comes back, we must watch close. . . . One time he tried to take my hand, and he said he would kiss me. And I say: 'That may be, Tony. You can kiss me because you stronger. But when you have, then you be dead.' And he knew that I speak what was to come."

"We care nothing for him. Let him keep out of my way. . . . . And when I saw you at the ball, I knew that you were the girl with the torch. And do you know what I said to myself? Let me whisper it to you."

"There is no one to hear."

"I said: 'You are to be my wife.' And just then you turned about and looked at me."

"But I did not see you."

"Come, now, you must have seen me."

"Well, perhaps. But I did not say: 'I am to be his wife.' No, I did not say that. And it cannot be, Virgil."

"But it is going to be, all the same, and you know it. Why, what is all this universe for if that is not to be? Why was this little island cast up here? Why did the word ring forth: 'Let there be light'? It is part of the plan of creation, and nothing can prevent it. . . . I shall have to wait, but I—"

"Will wait a long time, Virgil. But we must not talk like that. Come—let us forget such things."

She put her spell on him, and he was a boy again. Hand in hand they walked about, pretending that the acre island was miles and miles in extent. Time was a day-star shooting unseen across the sky, and then a heavy sentence fell upon him. It was time for him to go. In the cane she stood with him where his canoe was moored. He held her hand, drawing her toward him, but she took it away.

"No—no, you must not . . . Quick Virgil, you must go now. The sun is low."

CHAPTER X

In the night, in that hour of self-reproach which comes to us all, Virgil awoke in a rage with himself. He had been dreaming, had seen himself infirm of purpose, without character. Back to Highland Bruce he traced his ancestry, and was he to be the first of his race to prove degenerate, to trample upon the memory of his father, to loll in stupid love, to give his soul to a creature far beneath him in birth and schooling, a girl whose father had murdered! Out of bed he got, and bowed with the weight of shame, walked the uneven floor, for his slow steps were doddering.

"Caught in an instant, a fly in a speck of jelly, and have never been able to get free," he reproached himself. "Even Liberty Shottle, the slave of cards and dice, can see my weakness and must laugh at me. But by the God in Heaven it shall not be. In this land there is no law. I bring my own law with me, my oath, and a smile and a word of flattering love bade me put it aside, and I let it slip from me. Now I must redeem myself."

He stood at the window. Gamecocks were crowing the dawn, a courageous challenge to all the world. No, there would be no weakening now. The sweetish comedy had been played.

Swiftly he dressed himself, stole downstairs, out of the house, down to the river. There was no boat, but no matter, he would walk to Willow Head. Realizing that it was yet too early for the execution of his grim purpose, he halted at a wayside place, ate breakfast and waited for the sun. Then not in flurried haste, but deliberate in strength, he walked on to Willow Head, crossed over, found his neglected rope where, in a hollow stump in backsliding weakness he had hidden it, buttoned it beneath his coat and strode down into the swamp.

It was a long way to his canoe near the Muscadine isle, and then a long pull to Periwinkle house, but there was time enough. Stepho would not go away till Thursday. Ah, he would go away no more, for now on Tuesday he must settle with the spirit of Alfred Drace.

Mists hovered about, but the island was in a blaze of light. Silently the canoe slit the satin water. Silently he landed. Determined vengeance may pick its way as softly as eager love; and in the cane, sharper of whisper now that the weather was cool, he made not a sound. Out into the open he peered. No one within sight. On the bark of the live oak were the dead flowers of yesterday. There in the shade was the box that had served as table, once so prettily strewn with violets.

In spite of his vow of vengeance and his hatred of Stepho, these things caught at Drace's heart, shook his fixed purpose of action. For many minutes he waited—no sign of Stepho, of anyone. And then his blood leaped; for soft hands suddenly blinded him from behind, soft laughter bubbled over at his astonishment. And dark thoughts and dark purposes fled on the wind as he caught Nadine and hugged her close.

"Now for your punishment!" And he kissed her.

"Oh, you must not again . . . Virgil, I cannot like you when you are rude. . . . You must not!"

"I don't want you just to like me."

"You do not? Then I will try not to. . . . Come and sit down, Virgil. You worked so hard for your kisses you must be tired. . . . How did you guess?"

"Guess what?" he asked as she led him to the sofa and he sat gazing entranced as she captured and imprisoned her guerrilla bands of hair.

"That Father and Tony had gone hunting today. But they may be back at any time, Virgil. You must not stay."

"But I must stay; you hold me prisoner. I must stay until you love me as madly as I do you."

"As madly as you do me? That might not be so much mad, Virgil. But why should I love you?"

"Because you are to be my wife. We are engaged."

"Are we? I did not know that. Why you not tell me sooner?"

"I did, and now you must know it."

"But I did not. Then I must be stupid, yes?"

"The whole universe is stupid if it denies it. The angels are stupid if they fail to see it."

"Oh, you must not talk like that. It is worse than swearing the big oath. . . . And I am to be your wife, Mrs. Virgil? Then what do we do? Go about and sing with the fiddle?"

"No, we go to the beautiful places on earth and look upon them—together. We—"

"No, no, you must not think like that. You take my father by the wrist and he hate you. . . . And I do so wrong to see you. I am the sinner, but I believe that the Blessed One, she ask for my forgiveness. . . . No, Virgil, we can only play together and then . . . It will live in the mind, our childhood here. . . . My father is not well all the time now, and I must be good to him. . . . Only I must see you, sometimes. That is the only wrong I do him.

"For I—I love you. . . . I did not want to tell you, but I cannot keep it all the time down in my heart. . . . I dream of you all of the night, and I kneel down and pray that you always love me. . . . There, I have told you so much. And I kiss you, too. . . . Now—you may stay for a little time, and then you must go."

Boy and girl they played, not from the book but from love's ever-varying text. In his canoe they paddled afar off where the lily-pads paved the surface of the pond. They landed on a knoll where was spread over persimmon saplings an arbor of muscadine; here an adventurous catbird had her nest of young. She cried and fluttered about in great alarm, but when she saw that they were not her enemies, that they caught grasshoppers to feed her brood, she sat high among the vines, calling her mate, the musician, and here he came, scared at first, but when she had explained to him he sang his medley, ending with the catcall whence comes his unpoetic name.

The sun had been speeding, and went behind a cloud. Fear seized Nadine, and taking Virgil's hand, she urged him toward the boat.

"My dear one, we must go now. The sun was jealous that we so happy and will go into the dark to pout. . . . I will show you the near way for you to come again, the way I came when there was the fire. You can leave the canoe in the rushes and you will need it only to cross over to the cane. But we must hurry now."

In the rushes opposite the island he hid his canoe, and then she conducted him along a narrow and sometimes treacherous trail. Coming to the foot-log, she halted.

"I must leave you here. But I stand for two minutes. The sun he will wink a few more times. . . . I am so glad now to know that I will be your wife. And I am strong and can work."

"Lord bless you, but you won't have to work."

His arms were about her, her cheek against his, and with happiness the world was glowing.

"Till Thursday!" he cried as he dipped his paddle.

"Till Thursday!" she echoed as she watched him go.

"Till Thursday!" muttered the sinister voice of old Stepho, who had approached softly through the undergrowth at the sound of voices; and had overheard their parting. But when he came to Periwinkle house, he gave no sign to Nadine that he had overheard—only talked of Monsieur Boyce and the fine dresses he would buy for her when she was his wife.

It was long past noon when Drace reached the river.

The General had gone over into another parish to attend a stock sale, Tycie said; and when she had looked at Drace more closely, at his torn clothes, his muddy shoes, she sighed and sat down beside him where on the rustic bench he had dropped to rest before going to his room.

"Virgil," she said, "there is something troubling you. Now, you needn't tell me that it is business. I know what business is. I know all of its tricks; but I also know love and all of its tricks. Virgil, you are in love. Let me hope that it is not that Nina Spence. She isn't worthy of you; and besides, she doesn't belong to us. She is not of our world. Virgil, I am so sorry."

She put her hand on his arm, and he took it and affectionately kissed it.

"Aunt Tycie, I never saw the girl you speak of. I am in the—the throes, you might say, and have been—was before I got here, but not with her."

"But is it with anyone I know?"

"You have seen her, I have heard."

"Oh, you must tell me. It shall be sacred with me. If you only knew how people tell me their affairs of the heart. Even old Colonel Josh has told me. Now, why won't you?"

"I shall tell you, but I must put you on your honor. I said that you have seen her. You have; you spoke of her. Nadine—"

"Oh, Virgil! But her father!"

"Yes, I know. But let me tell you my story.

He told of his love, not of his father's death—told her nothing of his oath; she listened enraptured; and when he had finished, she mothered him with her arms about his neck.

. . . .

About ten o'clock next day, while the family sat in the shade, up to the gate drew a resplendent carriage, drawn by two black horses and driven by a negro in livery. Out stepped a man as tall as Lincoln and wearing a hat as high as his. His raiment flashed like the varnish of his equipage. Drace recognized him as he came through the gate, taking off his gloves, and the General cried out:

"Tycie, I wish I may die dead if it isn't Liberty Shottle!"

"Colonel Shottle, at your service," replied Liberty, bowing and gesturing with his gloves in his hand.

The General and Drace grasped him, stroked his velvety raiment, urging him to a seat.

"Why all this, Colonel Shottle?"—from the General. "You don't mean to tell me that you have sold your jute-stock?"

"Uncle Howard, sir, first issue orders to have my carriage stored, my horses stabled and my driver quartered, please."

The order was issued, and they sat waiting for Shottle to explain his transformation.

"A simple story," he began, stretching out his legs. "But do not forestall me. Poker, dice, roulette, faro, hazard—all of them failed."

"And this comes of legitimate investment!" Tycie cried. "I knew it would. Oh, I knew it just had to come. Now tell us about it.

"It was an investment, Aunt Tycie. But let me not forestall myself. I left here on a boat, got broke. Finally I reached Tampa, Florida."

"Away down there, Liberty?"—from Tycie.

"Patience, my dear aunt. Tampa, and broke! After a day of hope with its throat cut from ear to ear, I got on a boat bound for Havana. The Spanish captain gave me passage for service. He was studying English, and I agreed to explain to him certain niceties of our mother tongue, you understand; and I am sure that, reaching port, he knew more about gambling terms than he could have picked up in a year of close study in one of our ordinary schools. He was appreciative, generous, and gave me a bonus of five dollars. I went to a hotel, not of the first class, and it was there that I made my investment. The weather was warm and—"

"For gracious sake, Liberty, tell us!" his aunt urged him.

"That is my aim, but let us not be impetuous. . . . I was eating a Spanish stew out on the sidewalk, the weather being warm, when along came an agent—not a man in distress, but a regular agent—and I invested with him. I bought a ticket in the Havana lottery. . . . Wait, now. Nothing ever happens until it does, you know. The drawing came off two days later, and my number, 356,792, won the first prize, twenty thousand in gold."

Natural Qualification.

"Oliver Twist was always asking for more," remarked Senator Sorghum.

"Yet he became a worthy citizen," observed the admirer of Dickens.

"Yes. Probably he grew up eventually to be a tax collector."

Masterpiece Born in Suffering.

Tom Hood's famous "Song of the Shirt" was composed in 1844, while he lay in bed suffering from his last sickness.

THIS C. & O. CONDUCTOR GAINS 35 LBS.

"I enjoyed Christmas this time with more pleasure than I had in years," remarked W. L. Mahone, 410 Charlottesville, Va., the other day, in telling of the benefits he has derived from the use of Tanlac. Mr. Mahone has been a railroad conductor for nineteen years. He runs on the Chesapeake & Ohio from Charlottesville to Washington, D. C., and Richmond, Va.

"My stomach and digestion had been bad so long that I can hardly remember the time I could eat without suffering afterwards. I gradually grew weaker until I was often having to lay off from my run. In this run-down condition I contracted pneumonia in both lungs and came near losing my life.

"After this spell my stomach troubled me worse than ever and I remained almost as weak and helpless as a baby. While sitting around reading the papers I was attracted by the statements about Tanlac, which had such a sincere ring that I was led to believe the medicine might help me up the hill, and it pulled me clean up to the top. My appetite never fails, stomach misery is all gone, and I have gained thirty-five pounds in weight. Tanlac keeps me feeling 'spick and span,' too, so I can make my runs and still feel fine."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

CROWDED OUT, AS IT WERE

Under the Circumstances, Batter's Complaint Did Seem Just a Little Bit Unreasonable.

An Englishman was persuaded to act as umpire in a ball game between an American and an Australian team in France. In the first inning, with three men on bases, the star batter of the American team stepped up to the plate.

"One ball," called the umpire.

"Two balls," called the umpire.

"Three balls," called the umpire.

"Four balls, batter out," called the umpire, who was immediately mobbed by the members of the American team.

"What d'ye mean by calling me out, you big boob," shouted the irate victim of the ruling.

"But, my dear fellow," explained the Englishman, "can't you see I have no place for you?"

A Baseball Fool.

A young lady whose knowledge of baseball was not large sat watching a game which was proving very disastrous to the home team. Finally she turned to her escort and exclaimed:

"Isn't our pitcher grand? He hits their bats no matter where they hold them."—Everybody's Magazine.

Ma's Method.

Ma was putting the poor relations near the head of the table and pa wondered why.

"I love 'em and respect 'em, and all that," ma said, "but you know they don't wear expensive clothes."

"Well?"

"And the way you carve, pa, nobody knows which way the stuffing is going to squirt."

Sad Result.

"I thought she married that young millionaire to reform him."

"She did, but it worked the other way. Now even his fortune is dissipated."

CREATED A BAD IMPRESSION

Visitor's Remark, to Say the Least, Did Seem a Little Out of Place.

I was visiting friends with whom I was not well acquainted, writes a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune. They insisted upon my staying overnight. I had an important engagement for the following evening and wanted to look my best, so I really was anxious to get away; but upon thinking it over I finally consented to stay.

That being settled, we went down town to pass the evening, and while two of the girls were in the middle of what ought to have been an interesting conversation to me I, thinking of all I had to do before the following evening and not having concentrated on what they were saying, blurted out: "What time does the first train leave in the morning?"

They both looked at me in great surprise, naturally thinking I was extremely anxious to get away from the town and them, too. In view of our short acquaintance, words failed me, and try as I would I could not make them understand.

SHE DYED A SWEATER, SKIRT AND CHILD'S COAT WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her worn, shabby dresses, skirts, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything, even if she has never dyed before. Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is sure because Diamond Dyes are guaranteed not to spot, fade, streak, or run. Tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton or mixed goods.—Advertisement.

The Busy Toothpick.

The Woman was seeing a friend off at the Northwestern station. Nearby was a man saying good-by to his wife, for their domestic conversation was in no sense whispered.

As the husband talked the Woman watched, quite fascinated, his toothpick as it moved up and down in his mouth.

The gate was being opened. The travelers were passing through. The Woman wondered what would happen to the almost animated toothpick while the man said good-by to his wife.

Surely he would remove it. But no—with a move of his lips he had shifted it to a corner and proceeded to kiss his wife. No wonder wives read "The Sheik" and such. One would have to do something to make up for dividing a kiss with a toothpick.—Chicago Journal.

Sufficient Cause.

"How did you happen to quit sparking Miss Tootsie Bender?" asked an acquaintance.

"I didn't like music; that's why!" disgruntledly replied an Ozark swain. "Every night I was over there just as soon as I got seated old man Bender would come in, take down his infernal fiddle and begin to play. The longer he'd play the tireder I'd get, and then finally when only about 'leven o'clock he'd begin to saw off 'Home, Sweet Home.' I couldn't stand any more of it and lit out. And I hain't going back there, neither!"—Kansas City Star.

Practical Mind.

The approach of Christmas brought the usual problem to an Alameda (Cal.) man—what to give his wife. She had everything he could think of, and there seemed nothing more to bestow. "My dear," he said, "I wish to give you a present to cost about $20, but I can't think what. Can you?" The lady pondered it seriously, and said: "I am thinking of my roses. I wish you would give me $20 worth of manure."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A MAN WHO BECAME FAMOUS

Doctor R. V. Pierce, whose picture appears above, was not only a successful physician, but also a profound student of the medicinal qualities of Nature's remedies, roots and herbs, and by close observation of the methods used by the Indians, he discovered their great remedial qualities, especially for weaknesses of women, and after careful preparation succeeded in giving to the world a remedy which has been used by women with the best results for half a century. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is still in great demand, while many other so called "cure-alls" have come and gone. The reason for its phenomenal success is because of its absolute purity, and Dr. Pierce's high standing as an honored citizen of Buffalo is a guarantee of all that is claimed for the Favorite Prescription as a regulator for the ills peculiar to women.

NO DEAD LEVEL IN NATURE

Gardener Seemingly Made Point in Discussion With the Soap Box Sage.

The gardener was trimming the front hedge and the soap box sage paused to converse with his acquaintance wielding the shears. The orator soon had his favorite theme going. The gardener was something of a philosopher himself and ventured to put a question.

"Then you think humanity should be kept trimmed to a dead level like this hedge?"

"Put it that way if you wish," said the orator.

The gardener pointed to the side of the yard.

"Ah, but I trimmed that hedge only last week. Now look at it. So far as we can see every branch had the same opportunity. Yet some are higher than the rest. You can't keep 'em down, friend, you can't keep 'em down."—Chicago Daily News.

Sympathy Astray.

It was Saturday night.

In the gutter stood a large, red-faced woman. On her ample form was displayed a card, bearing the words: "Disabled Policeman."

Passers-by, stopping to read the card and drop coppers into the woman's outstretched hand, soon formed quite a small crowd, and at last the inevitable man-in-blue appeared on the scene.

"What is this?" he asked the woman, pointing to the card.

"It's all right, guv'nor," replied the woman. "I disabled him last night, so I'm just collecting the fine!"—London Answers.

Comedy and Tragedy.

Tragedian—But, laddie, your good wife likes me not.

Comedian—Oh, that's all right—it amuses the children.—London Tit-Bits.

Something to think about

When lying awake at night, stop counting imaginary sheep and think what is probably the cause of your sleeplessness.

Both coffee and tea contain a drug element that irritates a sensitive nervous system, often causing restless nights and drowsy, irritable days.

A delicious, hot cup of Postum contains nothing that can deprive you of restful sleep at night, or hamper your days. But it does supply all the warmth, comfort and satisfaction that can be desired in the mealtime beverage.

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

MRS. G. W. HALL SICK FOR YEARS

Wants Women to Know How She Was Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Lima, Ohio.—"Indeed, your medicine is all you say it is! I had very severe troubles such as women often have, and could do no heavy work. I was sick for several years, and from reading your ads. I finally decided to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I am now doing my own washing, which I haven't done for several years, and can walk long distances without those dragging pains and weak feelings. The Vegetable Compound is fine, and I never forget to say a good word for it to other women when they say they need something."—Mrs. G. W. HALL, 539 Hazel Avenue, Lima, Ohio.

There are many women who find their household duties almost unbearable owing to some weakness or derangement. The trouble may be slight, yet cause such annoying symptoms as dragging pains, weakness and a run-down feeling. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a splendid medicine for such conditions. It has in many cases relieved those symptoms by removing the cause of them. Mrs. Hall's experience is but one of many.

Minneapolis—A bill to create a patrol system over Minnesota's trunk highways which would guard the state's property and supplement activities of police and sheriffs' forces in apprehending criminals is practically sure of being put before the Legislature at the coming session.

RUSS MAKE PLEA FOR RECOGNITION

M. Tchitcherin, Soviet Minister, Addresses Delegates at Lausanne.

SPECIAL PARLEY ASKED

Declares Powers Continue Domination and Seek to Make Straits Basis of Attack Against Black Sea Countries.

Lausanne—M. Tchitcherin, the Russian Soviet foreign minister, made an appeal for recognition of the Soviet Federation in a statement to the Associated Press:

"The Soviet republic," he said, "earnestly hopes that the beginning of the new year will bring us into closer collaboration with the American people for productive work and for the opening of our natural resources to mankind.

For Universal Disarmament.

"Our most earnest desire is universal naval disarmament, as well as disarmament on land, peace and productive work. The Soviet republic is strong enough to resist aggression, but we must regret that the scheme which has prevailed at Lausanne will compel us to arm and fortify our south coast and will divert us from our fundamental aim—production."

The entire Soviet delegation delivered a New Year's sermon to the powers, taking as a text, "Russia's Sympathy for Oppressed Peoples."

M. Tchitcherin distributed to all the delegations at Lausanne a memorandum declaring that a solution of the Near East problem "is possible only by abandonment of the policy of conquest and intervention toward Turkey."

"Turkey Saved."

"Happily," the memorandum continues, "the Soviet's advent to power in Russia has saved Turkey from total disintegration.

"Unhappily, however, at Lausanne, according to the memorandum, the great powers continue their old policy of domination and expansion and seek to settle the straits problem so that it can be used as a basis of attack against the Black Sea countries.

The memorandum warmly takes sides with Turkey in her struggle for sovereign freedom and insists that imperialistic nations must cease to consider Moslems as inferiors.

Special Parley Asked.

In behalf of the Moscow government, M. Tchitcherin recommends the calling of a special conference to examine into the status of the minorities of all countries and declares that the only way to establish peace in the valley of the Danube and in the Balkans is the formation of a confederation by the people of those regions, each state retaining its autonomy.

Optimists found hope in the fact that the Turks have agreed to meet the British experts and discuss the Mosul frontier, and in the announcement that further progress had been made in the solution of the straits problem. But it is generally admitted that no change for the better or the worse can come until Ismet Pasha has heard from Angora and until the trend of the Paris reparations conference can be noted.

KIDNAPPERS RETURN GIRL

Hostage Returned as Father Reports $20,000 Demand to Police.

Detroit, Mich.—Eight-year-old Mary Giovannangeli, kidnapped from in front of her home and held for a ransom of $20,000, was returned to her home in less than 12 hours after her father, Nicola Giovannangeli, East Side banker, had reported her disappearance to the police.

The child's return was almost as daring as her seizure more than a week ago. Despite a police guard stationed at her father's bank and home to block any attempted reprisals for his action in reporting the demand for ransom, she was brought to within half a block of her home. There a man helped her from an automobile and directed her to "hurry home and don't be afraid of the dark."

RAILROADS MAKE RECORDS

Washington—In spite of car shortage and strike conditions which railroads encountered, they were able to move more agricultural products during 1922 than ever before in their history, according to a statement given out by the car service division of the American Railway association.

Chicago Building Breaks Records.

Chicago—All Chicago's building records had been smashed when Charles C. Bostrom, building commissioner, closed his books for 1922. The value of new structures for which permits were issued totaled $227,742,010. The previous record was that of 1921 when permits were issued for buildings to the value of $124,028,010. December of this year was the greatest of any month in Chicago's history for buildings, records showed, when permits were issued for buildings valued at $34,792,200.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Is Winter Time Your Backache Time?

Does Your Back Foretell Every Change of the Weather? Do You Feel Old and Stiff and Suffer Sharp, Rheumatic Pains? Then Look to Your Kidneys!

ARE winter months your backache months? Does every cold, chill or attack of grip leave you lame, achy and all worn out? Does your back throb and ache until it seems you just can't keep going another day?

Then look to your kidneys! Grip, colds and chills throw a heavy strain on the kidneys. They overload the blood with poisons and impurities that the kidneys have to filter off. The kidneys weaken under this rush of new work; become congested and inflamed.

It's little wonder, then, that every cold finds you suffering with torturing backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities.

Don't wait! Delay may lead to serious or chronic kidney sickness. Realize that your kidneys have weakened in fighting the cold-created poisons and give them the help they need. Begin using Doan's Kidney Pills today. Doan's have helped thousands at such times and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

M. A. RIVETT, 1108 Cheyenne Ave., Grand Forks, N. Dak., says: "I take Doan's Kidney Pills whenever I have attacks of backache and they are all that is claimed for them for such trouble. I have to do a good deal of lifting, and being exposed to all kinds of weather I frequently take cold. This settles in my kidneys and causes a severe lameness in my back. I become so lame I can hardly stoop or lift, but Doan's Kidney Pills never fail to rid me of this trouble."

MRS. E. GRAHAM, 411 Third Ave., N. Jamestown, N. D., says: "I took cold after doing a heavy washing and it settled on my kidneys. I suffered so with backache it interfered with my housework. Twinges of rheumatic pain affected my left shoulder and made it painful. I was so bad I couldn't lift. My kidneys acted too frequently, and as a member of the family had used Doan's Kidney Pills, I got some and took them. Doan's cured me and I haven't had a sign of the trouble since."

Fatal Artillery Practice.

While a battery of Swiss artillery was at practice near Sursee, north of Lucerne, a shell richochetting from the ground struck the house of a peasant. The peasant's wife, who was having dinner with her daughters and a workman, was killed, but the others were not harmed. The shell entered through the kitchen and buried itself in a loft without exploding.

Wonderful Japanese Towers.

The tallest reinforced concrete tower in the world has recently been completed in Tokyo, Japan, and will be used to support the aerial of a wireless station. It is 672 feet in height. The lofty structure, as described in Popular Mechanics Magazine, is built in the form of a chimney, having an inside diameter at the base of 55 feet, and tapering to 3 feet 6 inches at the top. A spiral steel stairway winds up through the interior, landings being located approximately every 150 feet, these connecting to exterior balconies, from which sightseers can view the surrounding country. Engineers are said to be preparing plans for two similar towers, which, however, will be almost twice as high.

A Heavy Hand.

Prof. Barrett Wendell, Yale's brilliant and famous critic, was talking at a tea about a new novelist.

"He has a heavy, awkward hand," said Professor Wendell. "When he wants to be impressive he reminds me of the divine who went to jail to administer the last comforting rites of the church to a murderer.

"'Dugald, mon,' he said—for he was a Scot—'Dugald, mon, the gallows is ready, the rope's ready, the hangman is ready—Dugald, are you ready?'"—Exchange.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Rolla Potter and Nora Potter, his wife, mortgagors to the Farmers State Bank of Grygla, mortgagee, dated July 24, 1917, with Power of Sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, on July 30, 1917, at 2:00 P. M. in Book 84 of Mortgages on Page 408, which mortgage together with the debt secured thereby was thereafter assigned as follows; Farmers State Bank of Grygla to Northwestern Trust Company, dated August, 1, 1917, recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of Marshall County, Minnesota, August 28, 1917, at 1:00 P. M. in Book 850 of mortgages on page 251; Northwestern Trust Company to H. H. Parkhouse dated August 14, 1917, and duly filed for record in the said office November 14, 1922, at 8:00 o'clock A. M. in Book 103 of mortgages on Page 505; which default consists in failure of said mortgagors to pay the sum of $60.00 interest coupon falling due July 24, 1921, and in the payment of other principal and interest since falling due. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of $1,000.00 principal and $60.00 interest coupon with interest on both amounts at six per cent per annum since July 24, 1922, and the sum of $60.00 interest coupon with interest thereon at six per cent since July 24, 1921, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date hereof of One thousand one hundred forty-six dollars ($1146.00) and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof;

Now therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Northeast quarter (NE1-4) and the East half (E1-2) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section eight (8) in Township One hundred fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth principal Meridian for Minnesota in said Marshall County, State of Minnesota, with the hereditements and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said county at the front door of the court house in the city of Warren in said county and state on the 16th day of January, 1923, at 10:00 o'clock A. M. at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $1146.00 and interest from date hereof and taxes if any and $75.00 attorneys fees as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements provided by law subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Seventy-eight ($78 00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Harold M. Hicks and Emily A. Hicks, his wife, Mortgagors, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 16th day of July 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 23rd day of July 1919, at one o'clock P. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 130.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, to Helen S. Winton by written assignment dated the 26th day of July 1919, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 6th day of August 1919, at Two o'clock P M., in Book 90 of Mortgages on page 562.

And Whereas, The said Helen S. Winton, the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 ($1398.28) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from the 21st day of December 1922, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of section Thirty-four (34); and the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of the Northwest Quarter (N W1-4), and the West half (W1-2) of the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing One Hundred Sixty acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 10th day of February 1923, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

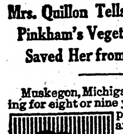
DOCTORS WANTED TO OPERATE

Mrs. Quillon Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Saved Her from an Operation



Muskegon, Michigan.—"After doctoring for eight or nine years with different physicians without any relief at all, they said at last that medicine would not reach my case and I should have an operation. I had heard of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and often saw it advertised in different papers where some women had suffered just as I did and got well and strong again by taking the Vegetable Compound. I decided to see what it would do for me, and before I had finished the fourth bottle I was much better, the weakness stopped and the severe pains in my sides left me. I am now much stronger and do my own work and work in the factory besides. I am still taking the Vegetable Compound and give it all the praise."—Mrs. NELLIE QUILLON, 17 Morris St., Muskegon, Mich.

Women should heed such warning symptoms as bearing-down pains and weakness, for they indicate some female trouble, and a persistent and faithful use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will seldom fail to help.

Tycie hugged him; Drace shook his hand; and the General exclaimed his astonishment.

"Well, that beats anything I ever heard in my life. It doesn't seem possible, sir."

"No, and I was somewhat taken by surprise, Uncle Howard. But there is often success in a change of occupation, and I had tried everything else. It took me a few moments to adjust myself; then I got a draft, and in Mobile received premium enough on my gold certificate to pay my debts. And now it gives me great pleasure to perform that duty. I owe you, Uncle Howard, twelve hundred and thirty dollars, all told. Aunt Tycie, I owe you five hundred. Virgil, I owe you—but we'll get at that later. Worthy and patient creditors, here we are!"

He took out a roll of bank notes, counted the amount of his indebtedness to his aunt and showered her lap with greenbacks. Then he turned to the General.

"No, Liberty, I don't want the money," protested Bethpage. "If you pay me, it will be the first time you ever returned borrowed money to me, and I don't care to have you establish a precedent that might bring disappointment in the future."

After the family bedtime, Shottle came into Drace's room and requested him to report as to what progress he had made; and Drace told him all that had occurred.

"And now let me tell you a notion of mine," said Shottle then. "If you are waiting for that old sharkbone to decay, you'll perhaps wait twenty years. Attention: I'm going on a little trip tomorrow. In two days, when I come back, I'll drive down to a convenient point; you fetch the girl, into the carriage you jump, and away we go, drive over to some place where we can catch a train, and Cincinnati before old Stepho knows which way we've gone. What do you say?"

"But—what becomes of my oath? Oh, don't think that because I dally I have forgotten it or that in one jot I shall fail to keep it. If I should, in all after-life I'd have a contempt for myself."

CHAPTER XI

"Till Thursday!" Drace had cried. Nadine had echoed it, and another voice, hidden in the cane, had muttered the words with how different a meaning! Now Thursday was come again; and Virgil Drace infirm of purpose, again made his way down the river and through the swamp to his tryst with Nadine.

But Death sought to make a third at that tryst. From afar the sentineled Tony had seen Drace coming. And hardly had the Northerner's canoe touched the bank when from out the cane Tony and Stepho leaped upon him and bore him to the ground, dazed by a blow from an oar.

"Ha! My fine carpetbagger! You seize my wrist and keep my knife from the old General! You steal here to make love to my daughter! Ha! Who will now keep my knife from you? In a little while, now, you will be deep in the marsh, and the green mold will be on your bones. And the old fool at the big house, he die too, for my men will cut his throat. And then—"

A piercing cry from the house, and Nadine ran to them, a knife that mated Stepho's dirk clutched in her hand.

"No—no!" she cried. "You shall not."

Stepho looked up. "Take the girl away, Tony," he commanded.

But Nadine threatened him off with her knife. Then she turned the blade in another direction and spoke again. "If you do not let Virgil go," she said, "I will kill myself—now."

Stepho knew Nadine—the wild heart of her. "You promise never to see this man again, and to marry Monsieur Boyce, like I wish?"

"I promise nothing—except that I will kill myself if you do not let him go."

Stepho hesitated a moment, craft fighting with anger. Then craft won; he or Tony would stroll up to the Bethpage plantation and make an end of the General and Drace that night.

"All right," he snarled. "He can go. But let him never come back here or—" He drew the back of his dirk across his own throat in a significant gesture. Then with Tony he lifted Drace into his canoe; and the young man, still dazed from the blow, feebly made his way out of the swamp.

When he had passed from sight, Nadine dropped her knife and sank to the ground sobbing. Old Stepho turned savagely upon her.

"You liar! You she-wolf! I would kill you, but I promise you to the man Boyce. An' now there come something that I tell you. In you there is not the blood of Stepho la Vitte. But you never shall know your name. You she-wolf!"

He thrust himself toward her, his fangs gleaming in his merciless mouth, but without flinching she now laughed in his face.

"Oh, you make me so thankful that I am not your child. You hang his father and would murder him! But he will be gone; and if you kill me, it makes no matter. And you think I will stay here and let the man come to marry me! I will—"

He seized her, and Tony ran in to help. She fought with the dirk, but they wrenched it from her hand, held her helpless, dragged her into her room; and she lay for a time on the floor while she heard them fastening her in her prison. It was now dark. She got up, went to the window and found that heavy bars had been nailed across it. She lighted her lamp and with a pencil began to write a note to Drace, praying in her heart that she might find some way to send it to him. Little she slept and in the dawn she was at the window, the vines all of them gone. She heard footsteps near, and she tried to look out to discover who it might be, but she could gaze neither to the right nor the left, so closely was she mewed. She spoke, softly, louder and then there drew the darkened form of a man, Batoche, an old frog-hunter whom once before she had employed.

"I am here to borrow the mushkrat-spear for the one day, for mine he was broke; but they are still asleep."

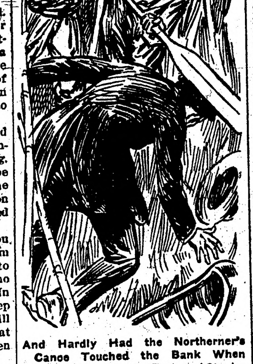
"Come closer, good Batoche, and listen to me. Take this note to Monsieur Drace, at General Bethpage's house—quick, with no one to see you, and I will give you a diamond when you come back."

"Give me the note, an' I be there soon."

She gave him the note, and he hastened away. She stood at the door, wondering why she had not heard her father stirring about. Once she thought she heard him call Tony. After a long time Tony came, and she heard them together as they went out. Then all was silent.

. . . .

Sick in mind and body, Drace made his way back to Bethpage. He made himself as presentable as possible before he entered the house; fortunately, too, the attention of Tycie and the General was at that moment centered on Colonel Josh, who had stopped off to pay them a call—and who showed astonishment when asked to walk out to dinner, though he yielded with astonishing alacrity to the pressure of the General's hand upon his arm. He was busy with a helping of late mustard greens and hog's jowl, when Tycie inquired:



And Hardly Had the Northerner's Canoe Touched the Bank When From Out the Canoe Tony and Stepho Leaped Upon Him.

"And how is dear Lucy?"

"Madam," said Josh, "I am grieved to impart to you a distressful piece of news. She is soon to be married to a man named Spivan."

"Oh, I'm so sorry, Colonel Josh."

"Madam, it is a calamity. Luke Spivan!"

"What's the matter with him?" the General inquired. "Isn't broke, is he?"

"General, the man has money. But do you know what his calling is? I shall enlighten you, sir. This fellow is a dealer in oysters, the—the excrescence of the sea, you might say. And not only that, but he deals in crawfish as well, back-crawling crawfish, sir. I offered her my heart and my home. I told her that I would devote my life to her, and from week to week she put me off. But when this fellow Spivan asked her, I understand she accepted him at a jump, sir. And now I advise him to keep out of my way."

"Oysters and crawfish, eh?" said the General, winking at Drace.

"Those were my words, General—not only oysters but crawfish. I would not have believed it if she had not assured me with her own lips, lips that will please pardon my nearness to profanity."

Tycie's sympathy went out to old Josh, haloed him; and with her eyes she begged the General to drop the subject, but it was sweeter to him than any sugar ever grained in his mill.

After dinner they were in the parlor when they saw a vagabond equipage stop at the gate, an old carry-all drawn by a staggering horse, driven by a ragged negro. There was one passenger in the habilaments of a scarecrow, topped off with a yellow cotton hat—enough to disguise any man on earth save one, and this man was the exception.

"Tycie, what did I tell you!" cried the General. "I knew it as well as I knew my name. Now look at him!"

They looked at him, went out into the hall to meet him, Tycie in convenient tears. The visitor kissed her and shook hands with the men.

"It is not necessary for me to assert that I hold no commission, civil or military," said the vagrant.

"Sit down, sir," commanded the General. And then, surveying him slowly from head to foot: "Will you please state as to whether or not you regard yourself a human being?"

"General," said Tycie, "please don't scold him, for I'm sure he must be hungry."

"My dear, I shall not scold him; but I don't see anything about him that calls for congratulations."

"Liberty," said Virgil, "tomorrow we'll go over and have the parish surveyor run you off a suit of clothes."

"My dear relatives, I thank you for these little attentions; and as to your question, Uncle Howard, let me say, sir, that my claims as to being a human are somewhat vague. One of the first things I discovered about myself was my unreality. When do we eat?"

Tycie ran out and returned with a piece of frosted cake that looked like a corner broken off a marble mantlepiece. The General was laughing.

"Well, Liberty, we are always glad to see you, anyway. It is the unreality, if I may so speak, that spices our lives; and when you come with your gilded worries, you enliven us. Where have you been, anyhow?"

"I've been wherever there is," said Shottle, gesturing with his cake. "First I went to Memphis, to the races, and gave old Skinny Hughes two hundred for a sure card on the entries. Lost ten thousand. Then I followed the horses to Lexington, with my bank account leaking like a sprinkling cart. But why linger when nothing can be swifter than the approach of poverty? Finally I sold my clothes to a negro preacher and invested my all in lottery tickets. It seemed that I possessed myself of all the figures of the multiplication table, didn't see how I could possibly miss, but I did. It wasn't laid out for me to win again. He gets to a certain pinnacle of fortune, slips off, and spends the rest of his life struggling to get back. When do we eat?"

Long after bedtime Shottle came to Virgil's room.

"Virgil, you know I've got to hit on something of a permanent nature. So the question is, now that I've quit gambling, what am I going to do? If you'll not go to sleep, I'll tell you of a plan. Mark me: I have observed, along with thousands of others, that nothing digs deeper after rainy-day money than a circus and menagerie. It is known that the poor man of the South, and especially the negro, will sell his cookstove to buy a circus ticket. Now comes my plan, and mind you, I strive to keep it from being too sudden. Attention! You buy a circus, and I'll go along as ring-master. That is the one thing I am really fitted for. You never saw me crack a whip, did you?"

"Don't believe I ever did."

"All right, you've got something to look forward to. . . . . Yes, I'll be the ring-master, and—"

"And bet an elephant on the turn of a card," said Virgil.

"Ah, one of my own, perhaps, but not one entrusted to me. I am not an embezzler of elephants. I wouldn't bet a garter-snake on a sure thing. Besides, I told you I'd quit gambling—that is, I'm quitting. It isn't wise to expose my constitution to the shock of a sudden change. . . . Well, good night."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Kimono Copied From Nature.

The pattern of the child's kimono, exuberant, dainty or fantastic, is but a reflection of nature in Japan. A profusion of bowers is spread to brighten the Japanese children's year. In April, they go picnicing under the cherry blossoms, a canopy of delicate bloom. The birthday of Buddha comes just when these are at their best; thousands of children gather in one of the parks for the flower festival, offering flowers to the infant deity; the image stands under a canopy of blossoms. Then as azaleas, peonies, wistaria, and lotus follow in season, and, finally, the wonderful chrysanthemums, the children are out to enjoy them all. The splendid maple leaves of autumn are at once a most fitting background for Japanese children and a source of keen delight.

LOS ANGELES MAN SAYS IT NEVER FAILS

"Tanlac is my stand-by, and I wouldn't think of being without it. It has set me on my feet more than once when I had such bad spells of stomach trouble. I thought I couldn't get well." This emphatic statement was made recently by W. C. Wallace, 320 N. Normandy Place, Los Angeles, Calif.

"An acid stomach and indigestion caused me indescribable suffering for more than four years," he said. "Awful pains would strike me soon after eating, and I would be almost doubled up in agony. Often I had to take to my bed, and I would lose much weight with every spell. I was told I had ulcers, enlarged stomach and other ailments, but all my efforts to get relief failed. I kept getting worse, and figured I would have to get something to help me or I couldn't keep going much longer.

"I read in the papers where Tanlac was helping others with stomach troubles, so I began taking it. It never failed to straighten me out, and I gained back my lost weight, too. I am more grateful than I can say for the good this medicine has done me, and I do not hesitate to give it my fullest recommendation."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Relative Rewards.

"Do you know," said the earnest person, "that there are men renowned in literature, art and science whose annual incomes are not large enough to give them the ordinary comforts of life?"

"I don't doubt it," said Mr. Gawker, "but if nature gave them sound bodies to start with and they've enjoyed reasonably good health, it seems to me that it's their own fault if they haven't gone in for athletics and acquired proficiency with a pair of eight-ounce gloves."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple that any woman can dye or tint faded, shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, sweaters, stockings, hangings, draperies, everything like new. Conceding His Defects.

"Your handwriting is very bad indeed," said a man to a young college friend who was more addicted to sport than study; "you really ought to learn to write better."

"Yes," returned the young man, "it's all very well for you to tell me that; but if I were to write better people would be finding out how I spell."—London Answers.

Mrs. Marie Wermuth.

La Crosse, Wis.—"When I was quite a young woman my circulation became so poor that I would have a numbness in my limbs similar to paralysis. I was never sure of myself, for the numbness would come oftentimes in both limbs at the same time. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery not only gave me immediate relief, but it eventually cured me of this condition. I have not had such a spell in over twenty years but have been in the very best of health, thanks to Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery." Mrs. Marie Wermuth, 925 Pine St.

SPACE SAVING A DETRIMENT

Compact Sets Are Desirable in Some Ways, but Are Likely to Be Inefficient.

Believing in the summer that an ultra-compact set was the proper one to carry on vacation jaunts, scores of radio fans are now willing to concede that good service is more to be desired than small size.

Last winter amateurs and fans vied with one another in an attempt to produce "the smallest set." Usually the account of each apparatus was accompanied by reports of the receiving ability of the midget. Radios in finger rings, cigarette holders and necklaces created the idea that a radio set might as well be small if the maker was clever enough to compress the parts.

Basing their opinion on the impressions thus obtained, vacationists in hundreds of instances carried expectantly with them a small cabinet with tubes, rheostats, tuners and connected wire in one grand maze. Reports from the owners are enlightening if they are not encouraging.

When the aerial is a makeshift and the ground connection second rate, as they are sure to be when a station is only temporary, the set itself must be good enough to make up the lacking quality. And this is what the set that is too compact cannot, as a rule, do.

It is difficult to recall a squeezed-in set that does not violate the commandments of radio design. A glance inside the cabinet will show wires that vibrate in the magnetic field of an amplifying transformer, tuning and regenerative units improperly placed with reference to each other and lead wires from the various circuits running alongside for a sufficient distance to insure that the set will be noisy.

Next year it is a certainty that those who have experimented this summer with makeshifts will center their efforts on receiving sets that are sturdy enough to withstand express or baggage shipment, without affecting their final operation, leaving the question of size to "come as it will."

Odd African Tribe.

The El Molo ("Poor Devil") are a small and little-known tribe, dwelling on islands close to the east shore of Lake Rudolf, in East Africa. They are now a community of about 70 souls under the leadership of a blind chief.

They construct the poorest type of shelter from leaves of the Dom palm. Their sole food is fish, which they occasionally spear, but more often catch in coarse-meshed fiber nets; their only drink is the vile soda-impregnated water of the lake.

The El Moro are almost amphibious, and are apparently unable to go for more than an hour without water, for after that time their lips swell up and start bleeding. They have their own language.

Nothing to Eat.

My most embarrassing moment came when I had dinner with a friend who put out a most beautifully served and appointed meal, with gorgeous service and artistic settings, but with little food. I was duly impressed with the beauty of the meal, but equally depressed by the lack of food, and with both these feelings in mind I blurted out to the hostess on leaving: "You must come and dine with us soon. I can't promise you a more artistic dinner than yours was, my dear, but you may be sure it will be more substantial."—Chicago Tribune.

SERGEANT USES HIS BRAINS

Has Made Discovery That Weather Can Be Utilized as an Aid in Recruiting.

"Studying weather forecasts, that's how I land 'em. Thus one of the regular army's most proficient recruiters explains the success which has made him one of the "aces" of Uncle Sam's recruiting forces.

When winter blasts blow around his "Uncle Sam Wants You" sign, the sergeant hangs out alluring pictures of a field artillery column at rest on the side of a Hawaiian island road shaded with palm trees. When the city sizzles in the summer he extracts from his supply of posters a persuading "Spend Your Summer in Cool Alaska With the Infantry" sign.

"And you ought to see 'em flock in," gloats the sergeant. "Give me a week of rain and I'll land 'em for my post on the Mexican border, 50 miles away from a river. Come around and see me this winter. I can fill a division for the Philippines any day there's snow on the ground. But Alaska or the Canadian border, not a chance!"

Sentimental.

"I sorter hate to cut down that there old tree," admitted Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "Kinda seems like one of the family, so to say."

"Hallered memories, and all such, hanging around it, as it were?" inquired a visitor.

"Eh-yah! That's whur we tied our children, one after another, as they got big enough and put their first shoes onto 'em."—Kansas City Star.

Paris Strewn With Shells.

Unexploded shells, bombs and similar war souvenirs to the number of 6,600 have been picked up in Paris streets since the beginning of this year. The authorities believe that the owners of these dangerous articles are "dumping" them to get rid of them.

Beauty.

Many of the smartest beauty shops are adding courses in physical culture and have instructors who provide reducing exercises. The theory is that a woman must have a slender figure as a foundation for all beauty.

SAW 3 PRESIDENTS SLAIN

Robert T. Lincoln Probably Only Man in America to Witness Chain of Tragedies.

Robert T. Lincoln, son of President Lincoln, and now in his eightieth year, was in the army and stationed in Virginia when he received an order to report at Washington. He got into the theater just in time to see his father receive his fatal wound.

Robert T. Lincoln was secretary of war under Garfield. He was asked by the President to meet him at the station, and he reached there just as Garfield was assassinated. Mr. Lincoln received an invitation to attend the formal opening of the Pan-American exposition at Buffalo, and accompanied by his family got there just in time to see President McKinley shot by Czolgosz.

Mr. Lincoln related this eerie experience recently to a friend, says Forbes' Magazine, and, so far as he knows, says the writer, it had never before been published.

FEMALE VICTIMS OF PLAGUE

Figures Show That Tuberculosis Is Spreading, Chiefly Among Women Active in Industrial World.

The death rate from tuberculosis among women is on the increase. In spite of the increase in active cases among women the death rate for males is still higher than that for females by almost one-third. "The sudden influx of women into industry during the war may, in a measure, be responsible for this increase," says a statement from the National Tuberculosis association. "This does not mean that there is any real basis for the assertion that women are not as well fitted for industrial work as men are. It is a fact, however, that many women who work in industry also look after their household duties and bring up large families of children. Consequently, insufficient rest, improperly cooked food and lack of fresh air so undermine the constitution that they readily become victims of the tubercle bacillus."

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed and delivered by Oliver Martin, a single man, Mortgagor to Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1920, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of March 1920, at 9:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages on Page 615, and

Whereas, the said Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee and holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and whereas there is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $1777.80, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is Hereby Given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southeast Quarter (SE1-4), East Half (E1-) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) and Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-three (33) in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty-four (44) West, except that piece or parcel or strip of land 100 feet wide, being 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste Marie Railway track as the same is now located across the S1-2SW1-4 of Section 33, 157-44, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 24th day of February 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $1777.80, and interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Seventy-eight ($78.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Harold M. Hicks and Emily A. Hicks, his wife, Mortgagors, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 16th day of July 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 23rd day of July 1919, at one o'clock P. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 130.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, to Helen S. Winton by written assignment dated the 26th day of July 1919, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 6th day of August 1919, at Two o'clock P. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages on page 562.

And Whereas, The said Helen S. Winton, the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 ($1398.28) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from the 21st day of December 1922, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of section Thirty-four (34); and the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of the Northwest Quarter (NW1-4), and the West half (W1-2) of the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing One Hundred Sixty acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 10th day of February 1923, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law: subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Locals Defeat Newfolden

Holt opened its basket ball season by defeating the fast Newfolden quint by a score of 8 to 2.

Holt outplayed the opposing quint from the beginning and had them shut out until near the finish of the game. When Haus scored the lone basket for Newfolden.

W. Sandberg was the high scorer for Holt, caging two while Johnson and M. Sandberg each made one.

A return game will be played on the local floor Jan. 27.

Newfolden undoubtedly will come determined to win, and the locals are expecting a harder encounter than experienced at Newfolden. If you want to see a fast game, lets all turn out and (root) for the home team.

The annual meeting of District No. 14, of the Minnesota Co-Operative Creameries Ass'n., held at Thief River Falls on Jan. 11th, was a very good one. The Association went on record as favoring the grading of cream, and recommended that all creameries in the district commence grading as soon as possible. Since the first of the year the Association have had their own supply house, which means a large saving to member creameries in buying their supplies.

Senator Knute Nelson Declares Merchant Marine Is Imperative

By
KNUTE NELSON
U. S. Senator from Minnesota

© HARRIS & EWING

THE shipping problem in Congress is just plain business. We have the ships. What are we going to do with them? That is simple enough and the answer is just as simple.

Shall we continue to run 400 of the 1,500 we own and let the others lie idle and rust away? Shall we spend $50,000,000 a year to run only those 400?

Shall we sell all the ships to foreigners and then have them take hundreds of millions a year from us in ocean freights?

Shall we scrap the whole fleet and realize mere junk prices for ships that might be made useful for years?

Those are the things we must decide and decide quickly.

The alternative to these possibilities is the quick passage of the shipping bill. That way of settling the shipping problem is the business way—the plain business way—and of course the best way.

When we get the government out of the shipping business we end the expense of $50,000,000 a year and substitute a system of direct aid to private American owners who will run the ships under the American flag. Cost of that direct aid is a great deal less than the $50,000,000 a year we are paying to run 400 Shipping Board ships. We ought to save almost $20,000,000 a year by the change.

Nor is this $20,000,000 a year saving the only saving. With our ships run by American owners carrying American goods, we will keep in this country the hundreds of millions yearly in ocean freights that foreign carriers otherwise would take from us. Then, too, we will keep our shipyards busy and with them the dozens and dozens of allied industries.

The shipping question is in no way a partisan question. It is wholly national. The ships were built in the war emergency and helped us win the war.

If we seize the present opportunity and sell them to our own people before they become useless, we stand a good chance of getting a fair share of our own ocean carrying business. When the shipping bill is passed there will be plenty of American buyers for our government owned fleet. They cannot buy now because they cannot hope to operate at a profit. The direct aid given by the bill, however, offsets the higher operating costs of American ships, with the American standard of living and pay to the crews.

Our ships on the Great Lakes are protected by our coastwise shipping laws. They are the most efficient means of transportation in the world today. The standard of living and wages paid on board those Lake boats are the highest of any mercantile marine. When the shipping bill is in operation all American ships will develop the same efficiency.

When we sell the government owned ships we cannot expect to get anything like what they cost us to build because they were constructed in war time and at war prices. We have to stand that deflation, but the sooner we sell the ships the more we will get for them. Ships are not like real estate and when they are idle they depreciate a great deal faster than as if they were busy.

Incidentally the sale of these ships to Americans now at the comparatively low price of world market tonnage will be of advantage to us in the long run. It will be a large factor in establishing a permanent American merchant marine, because it will provide our owners with ships at a reasonable price and so keep down their capital costs. In the past high construction costs with the accompanying high interest charges, have tended to prevent Americans competing on equal terms with the more cheaply built and more cheaply manned foreign vessels in international trade.

What it means for us to be without ships is shown by our export and import figures. In 1913 we carried less than 10% of all our overseas business. In 1920, after we had a fleet, we carried nearly one-half. But the increasing competition in world trade and our lack of a definite maritime policy has cut this carrying of 50% of overseas business to about 33%. Unless we do something quickly we will soon be in the position we were in before the war and pay immense tribute to get our goods overseas.

There is another important side to this necessity for carrying our own goods. We cannot rely upon foreign ships because frequently their own people have the same things to sell abroad that we have. It would be ridiculous in any business to expect your rival to take the same trouble to deliver your goods in perfect condition and on time when he has some of his own to sell.

Looming far above any considerations of business, far above any salvage value from the government owned fleet, is the national defense. Unless we have a merchant marine of our own to back up our navy, we might as well scrap our fighting ships. We must have a merchant fleet to protect ourselves in both peace or war.

Drace was far too disturbed in mind to sleep, and before the sun was high he walked out alone in the garden, to muse upon his situation. Slowly he paced his way along the path. Someone spoke, and he turned to face the man Batoche.

"Monsieur, a note."

Drace took the paper and hastened into the summer house.

The note was brief, but full in the expression of what had befallen Nadine, something to throb with the telling of it: "As soon as you can, my love' one, you must come to me to take me from the man I thought my father, but who is the awful brute. Yesterday he called me a she-wolf and told me I am not his daughter; and when he told me, my heart was light, for then I have not within me the murderer's blood. Come not alone, Virgil, for Tony will be here, and both of them watch. I am locked a prisoner in my room, and tomorrow they take me to Memphis to make me marry Monsieur Boyce. But I fear not so long as I know you come."

Quickly Drace slipped up to his room, buckled on his pistol, found a rope, looped it with a hangman's noose and tucked it beneath his coat. Nadine was not Stepho's daughter; now he was free to act! Swift was he to answer the appeal, but he was set against her caution, the advice to bring someone with him. It was his fight alone, the execution of his oath, which was not dead like the autumn leaf, but fresh like the new leaf in the spring. He would shoot Tony, the dog, and then string up his master.

No one saw him, not even the watchful Tycie, and he hastened toward Willow Head, not having found a boat at the landing. Never had the river seemed so broad, the current so swift. At last his canoe touched in among the cane roots at the island's edge. He leaped ashore, but was cautious in the cane, an Indian in stealth as he approached the house. He heard not a sound, saw no smoke issue from the chimney. Perhaps the wolves were in wait for him, to snap him, but he was now in full view, and he ran at the top of his speed. But near the house he halted, peering about, looked in at the door of the main room, found it deserted, then walked softly around to the barred window. Nadine spoke before he recognized her, standing in the twilight of her prison.

"My heart was loud to tell me you would come, Virgil. And you brought no one with you. But of that there was no need now."

He stood in silence looking at her, his strength exerted against a bar at the window, to tear it loose, but the wrought-iron nails were too long, and he could not budge them.

"The ax, Virgil! Is it lying there?"

Acting upon her suggestion, and with no caution now against making a noise, he cut the bars away and helped her through the window.

"Nadine, he said, "my oath must now be kept."

His arms about her, he stood pressing her close, and never had he felt so strong, and surely never so determined. Her eyes half closed, her head on his arm, she did not speak. She looked as if she were at rest, and dreaming. He kissed her, and her eyes flashed wide.

"I have come to hang the monster that called you a she-wolf."

"When I have told you, yes. And now you will listen. Early I thought I heard Tony and my—I mean Stepho la Vitte, go out. But Stepho was not walking with Tony, the strong man, but was dragged out in the rocking-chair; for some time in the night come the strange stroke, and Stepho was paralyzed."

"Nadine! What are you saying?"

"I am saying that you must listen. Tony came to the window and told me what was happen'. I ask him to let me out, but he would not, for he wants to please Stepho till the last, on account of the money that may be somewhere hid. He went for the doctor, and he came but has gone away again, for I hear him say he can do no good. The old man was out in his chair where he so often sit; and we will go see him, for it will not be for long. Let us forget all and be kind when death was come, Virgil."

"Yes, but where is Tony now?"

"I think he is looking for the money. Let us go now to the poor old man."

"You forgive easily, Nadine."

She looked at him in wonderment.

"How can we not forgive when the heart say we must. Virgil? He use me for the trap, which I will explain all to you, but he give me the chance to be with you, and for that I thank him—and for not being my sure-enough father. . . . Come with me."

. . . .

Old Stepho sat in his chair asleep, but as they approached him, he opened his eyes, looked at Nadine, then at Drace.

"Monsieur was ver' strong. An' I kill you if I be not struck down like the beef. An' Tony kill you if he here, but I send him off for something. Ah, the leetle gel, she hate me now?"

"Monsieur," she said, "I cannot find it in my heart to hate. It is the poison. Many times you were kind, and I remember them."

He bowed his head, and through his tangled lashes looked up at Drace, fire gleaming through brushwood. But he spoke to Nadine, turning upon her a less malignant glance.

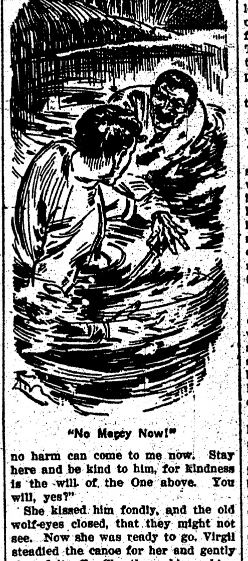
"The paralyze, it begin down here an' creep up. When it touch the heart, I was go. I say just now that Tony, he would kill the strong monsieur. He would not. He be scared when I was done. . . .

"Your name, leetle gel," pursued Stepho, "was Walton—the daughter of a northern man who live in the same town with Mr. Drace's father near Cincinnati. You an' your mother were carried off by my men; but your mother, she fall from the horse just as we come to our camp and she die. About her neck was a purse with money and papers—one that tell where more money is buried. After the war I go back and dig up this money, but I keep it for you, for your dowry. It is here—buried under the hearthstone. . . . Now—now I beg you to go for Father Tahan. You know where he live. Quick, for it creep up."

"Yes, I will go. Virgil will stay to keep you company."

"Let me go with you," Drace pleaded, fearful that some harm might befall her.

"No, my love' one," she gently opposed him. "You must stay here for no harm can come to me now. Stay here and be kind to him, for kindness is the will of the One above. You will, yes?"



"No Mercy Now!"

She kissed him fondly, and the old wolf-eyes closed, that they might not see. Now she was ready to go. Virgil steadied the canoe for her and gently shoved it off. She threw him a kiss, and rounding a green cape, raised her paddle into the sunlight and flashed him adieu.

. . . .

Drace returned to Stepho's chair, the old man shagging his brows at him.

Then thinking of the rope still buttoned tightly beneath his coat, he tore it out and threw it away. Nature, he reflected, had usurped his task, and he could safely turn over to her his claims. A slight noise behind him; he looked quickly about, and there a few feet behind him at the edge of the cane stood Tony. Upon him the vision of Drace's countenance came, it seemed, with a startling flash. Instantly he fell back, through the cane fringe, into the bayou. Loudly he cried for help.

"Oh, monsieur," implored the old man, "please he'p heem queek. He can no swim. An' he die befo' hees sins they was forgive. He'p the po' wretch, monsieur. Queek, monsieur."

Virgil threw off his coat and his pistol-belt, and leaped into the water. A moment before, he would have shot the beast; now he would save him.

Tony was not in sight. But soon he arose, swimming, and Drace saw a knife in his hand. In the water Tony was as much at home as a beaver! He dived, and Virgil knew now that it was his aim to dart beneath him and with the knife to rip him as a skillful swimmer rips a crocodile. But in the water the strong man, young Drace, was at home, too, and turning about with a quick swirl, he waited. Tony came up; and now they came toward each other, like rival otters—grappled and struggled, treading water, shoulders up. Virgil caught Tony's left wrist, wrenched his arm limp and helpless, seized him by the throat, his left hand steel-gripped about the murderous right wrist, the knife hand.

No mercy now! Fire and water, their game! Down, gasping, down! The head beneath the surface, the hand still out, striving to stab. Slowly the hand opened; the knife dropped; the hand closed—half opened, was limp. Drace turned loose his grip. The body sank.

Virgil swam ashore and came dripping out of the cane. The old man spoke:

"Tony! Whar he?"

"I have drowned him."

"Monsieur was ver' strong!"

"If I had brought him to the shore, he would have sneaked a chance to murder me."

"He was the bad man, yes. He ought be dead, yes. I was to keel heem bimeby. He keel the man here not long 'go. Twice he go keel you, an' once he snap the pistol. I set the trap for you to be stabbed in the water. Then there be no blood to tell the tale. Now I am so sor'. Will monsieur pull me into the house?"

"No. You would reach for a pistol to shoot me. Stay where you are."

"Monsieur have still suspicion. We wait."

. . . .

Virgil put on his coat, his belt, and sat down on the grass. The old man was silent, his eyes closed. He might be dead, but no matter. More than an hour dragged by, the breeze moaning in the cane. Virgil arose and stood near the chair. Stepho opened his eyes, but was silent. Virgil sat down again and waited, the wind tangling the tops of the cane.

He heard the canoe coming.

Father Tahan was kindly and soft of voice. For many a despairing wretch he had held the Cross. At sight of him old Stepho's eyes were still hard. Time wears granite away, but does not mellow it. Not yet had he granted mercy, and for no pity could he hope.

"Father, this is the man I would keel. I hate heem, the carpetbagaire."

"It is not true," said Virgil, standing near. "I fought against the carpetbaggers in June, in New Orleans, when they were hanging a man. I cut him down."

How great can be an instant change! The old wolf-eyes dewed soft.

"Oh, monsieur, I was that man! They hang me. I hear of the brave man, but I not know it was you. Please forgive me. . . . Tek the leetle gel, an' I know you be kind to her. She love you. For you she would die. Monsieur, I beg you not to think so hard of me. . . . No, my leetle gel, you must not cry."

"I did not know you," said Drace. "A cloth was about your features. Think not of it now. Listen to the one who has come with a message of peace and forgiveness."

The priest devoted himself to his sacred offices. The wind moaned softly in the cane. . . .

The priest spoke presently to Virgil. "She must not stay here. Take her away, and I will see that everything shall be done."

Nadine stood with Virgil's coat pulled close about her face. And into his heart she spoke:

"The sun is low, Virgil. But you leave me now no more."

[THE END.]

IS STILL A MYSTERY TO CHEMISTS

Men of Science Have Not Yet Discovered the Real Nature of the X-Ray.

It was in 1895 that Prof. Conrad Roentgen, the famous German physicist, announced the discovery of the fact that if a current of electricity be passed through a certain kind of glass bulb, from which the air had been exhausted, the resultant "light" (so called in spite of the fact that it is not apparent to the eye), would penetrate the flesh and other semi-solid substances and reveal objects on the other side. For want of a better name to give to this disturbance of the ether, Professor Roentgen called it the X-ray, "x" being the accepted symbol for an unknown quantity.

The real nature of the X-ray is still undiscovered. The ray itself is generated by a battery, the wires of which are connected with two electrodes, one of which is a concave disc of aluminum and the other a flat disc of platinum. The current is then discharged through a glass vacuum tube and produces the ether disturbance which renders flesh or clothing semi-transparent, while glass, metals, bones and mineral substances are generally opaque to it.

For Mildew.

When any of your clothing has become mildewed, put it in a bucket of buttermilk and it will come out looking like new.

Yakutat, a fishing village of far north Alaska, has a newspaper which picks up its news from the wireless.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Duluth—The city of Duluth has started an action in district court to recover approximately $42,000 from the Duluth Street Railway company for paving between streetcar tracks.

Duluth—Jack Harrington, a brakeman employed on the N. P., was killed when he fell between the cars, and he was dragged for blocks before the body was discovered.

Winona—Organization of a rotary club in Winona is practically completed. Norman Black of Fargo, district governor, outlined the purposes of the club at an organization meeting.

Minneapolis — President Harding probably will be in Minneapolis in June to attend the third annual convention of Disabled American Veterans of the World War.

Owatonna—Building improvements in Owatonna in 1922 reached a total of at least $500,000, according to a recapitulation of the year's building activities made here.

Minneapolis—Curtis L. Johnson of Rush City, hardware dealer, and member of the governing board of the Minnesota State agriculture society, was elected president of the society, at the close of its annual meeting.

Red Wing—The bank of Maiden Rock, known as the Carpenter bank, was broken into and the vault door broken, but the big money safe was unmolested.

St. Paul—St. Thomas' hopes for a championship basketball squad were given a severe jolt Tuesday when Coach Brandy announced that Mike Glenn, one of the big cogs in last year's machine, would not be able to play this season.

Lewiston—Miss Cora Crooke, poultry specialist with the Minnesota university extension division, announces that the community surrounding Lewiston has been selected as one of the 10 poultry demonstration centers of the state.

St. Paul—Governor J. A. O. Preus of Minnesota is on the program for the third tristate congress here, Jan. 18 and 19. Governor Preus is to make an address on "Benefits of the Great Lakes Waterway to the Cutover Regions," on the first day of the sessions.

Erskine—Citizens of this town, at a mass meeting, decided to build a community hall as a memorial to Erskine men who served in the World war. Of the amount needed $400 already has been collected and committees have been named to solicit the necessary funds.

Owatonna—The Steel county child welfare board will continue its work throughout the county in spite of the withdrawal of the support of the county commissioners in providing a paid executive secretary. This decision was made at the annual meeting of the board here.

Grand Rapids—Old potatoes which were sold by a grower at Grand Rapids for 21 cents a bushel brought as high as $12 a bushel, masquerading as "Florida New Potatoes" on the Minneapolis market in the holiday season, John H. Hay, deputy commissioner of agriculture, charged after an investigation.

Minneapolis—J. F. Reed, a Lac qui Parle farmer, whom Minnesota producers "yanked from a corn cultivator" a year ago to be president of the Minnesota Farm Bureau Federation, was unanimously re-elected at the fourth annual meeting of the association, held at St. Paul.

Duluth—Juvenile delinquency in St. Louis county decreased in the last year, according to the annual report of F. E. Resche, Duluth probation officer. One hundred and eighty-five children were brought before the juvenile court in 1922 compared with 220 in the previous year. Of these, 167 were boys and 18 were girls.

Cloquet—Peter Olesen, husband of Anna Dickie Olesen, the first woman candidate for the United States senate, who was defeated at the recent general election, announced he had resigned as superintendent of the schools here. Mr. Olesen said it was his plan to move from Cloquet, to some small town near the twin cities or to either Minneapolis or St. Paul, so that his daughter would have access to the university.

Rochester—For the first time since 1854 the village of Marion, once the most ambitious town in Olmsted county, has no place of business. Earl Yates, who of late has been conducting a store there, has closed up his affairs and ceased operation. This probably marks the last act in the drama of civic progress in Marion village.

Lake Benton—A pack of wolves, eight or 12 in number, have been raiding this district for several months and several hundreds dollars in poultry has been destroyed. Poultry men are planning an organized fight against the wolves in which all sportsmen will be asked to join.

Marshall—J. R. Bailey of— Ihlen, Minn., had an exciting ride in his automobile while the car was being pushed sideways along a railroad track for 150 feet by a switch engine in the yards here. Bailey was driving across the tracks when he was struck by the engin

Albert Lea—Masons here believe Albert Lea has more past masters of the Masonic lodge than any other city of its size in the northwest. Western Star lodge has 14 living past masters, nine of whom live in Albert Lea.

Waseca—Former Sheriff Bernard Fischer has appealed to the state supreme court from the decision of Judge Arthur B. Childress following the recount of ballots cast for sheriff at the Waseca county election.

Hibbing—Despite the heavy snows of last month, peat fires are still burning in the outlying districts, and an attempt is being made to extinguish the fires before the snow leaves the ground.

Winona—The first woman to be elected to office in a Winona banking institution assumed her position when Miss Goldie Harrington became assistant secretary of the Deposit Trust Savings bank.

Chatfield—Resumption of pre-war train service on the Chatfield branch of the Chicago & North Western railway was announced after many unsuccessful efforts by citizens for better train service.

Owatonna—The major building project begun during the past year included a new $200,000 home office building for the Minnesota Implement Mutual Fire Insurance company and the new National Guard armory.

Minneapolis—Fire fed by oils and chemicals, raged for two hours in a three story brick structure at Ninth street and Nicollet avenue, wiping out or badly damaging 14 stores, causing a loss estimated at $125,000.

Eveleth—Russell O. Smith, age 9, is recovering at a hospital from a fractured skull received when a lamp post, broken off when a speeding truck struck it, felled him.

Red Wing—Thomas E. Boyden was sentenced to St. Cloud by Judge Albert Johnson for a term not to exceed two years, after he had pleaded guilty to a charge of forgery.

Fairmont—A special grand jury has been called to consider the case against Clarence C. Hamblen of Ceylon, confessed slayer of his wife by poisoning her while she lay ill on October 9.

Slayton—At a meeting of the Town and Country club here the matter of tuberculosis among cattle was fully discussed. It was shown that the percentage of infection in Murray county was 11.9 per cent, the largest of any county in the state.

Alexandria—Albert Hansvick, fourteen years old was shot and almost instantly killed by his elder brother, Jalmar, when a Winchester rifle in the hands of Jalmar was accidentally discharged. The accident happened in the kitchen of the family home.

Mankato—It is improbable that citizens of Mankato will take an active part in concerted effort of towns along State Highway No. 60, from this city to Faribault, to have the state highway department pave the road, according to officials of the Civic and Commerce association.

St. Paul—A plan to market potatoes on a co-operative basis outlined at the old Capitol, St. Paul, at a conference of marketing directors and agricultural commissioners of the seven potato producing states of the Northwest. These states produce 34 per cent of all the potatoes in the country.

Brainerd—Judge W. S. McClenahan of the district court has granted a temporary injunction restraining the county commissioners of Aitkin county from entering into a contract of $138,881 to build a new courthouse in Aitkin. The plaintiff alleges that the county cannot build when no bonds had been voted and when not enough funds had accumulated to pay for the structure.

Crookston—"Old Bill" Anderson has started on his 20th year of incarceration in the Polk county jail, on a charge of vagrancy. Sheriffs and jailers, policemen and judges have come and gone, but Anderson has been regarded as a permanent fixture of the bastile. Every three months "Old Bill" shows up in municipal court to plead guilty to vagrancy and has been regularly sentenced to 90 days in jail.

Mankato—Prizes offered by the Hubard Milling company of this city, for the best acre of Marquis wheat raised in Blue Earth county or adjoining territory, have been awarded. Following are the winners: Clarence Pohl, first prize of $50 for an acre of wheat which yielded 22 bushels and 59 pounds; C. E. Whitney, of Mapleton, with 20 bushels and 41 pounds an acre, second, $30; A. D. Stanford of Mankato township, 17 bushels and 6 pounds to the acre, third, $20.

Red Wing—A man giving his name as D. E. Russell, whom no one here knew, walked away with $98 by turning quick tricks at two banks. At the Goodhue County National bank, Mr. Russell deposited a check for $264, saying he wanted $200 of it credited to him on a savings account, taking the balance in cash. At the First National bank, he deposited a check for $234, taking $34 in cash and asking that $200 be placed in the savings bank. Both checks were made out on blanks of Adams, Seaton & Co. of La Crosse, Wis. Both checks were worthless.

Crookston—C. H. Grist, member of the Chicago Retail Merchants association was the principal speaker at a weekly meeting of the Crookston Association of Public Affairs.

St. Paul—After three years as president of the St. Paul Trades and Labor assembly, William Mahoney will retire from active leadership of the organization.

Granite Falls—Rev. O. J. Kvale, who was elected in the November election to succeed Congressman A. J. Volstead has resigned as pastor of Our Savior's church at Benson, effective July 1, 1923

WOMAN SUFFERED THREE MONTHS

Pains in Back and Nervousness. Made Well by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Montevideo, Minn.—"I suffered for three months with pain in my back and sides, and was awful nervous so that I was unfit to do my work. After I began taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I grew strong, and now I weigh 150 pounds. I keep house and am able to lift and do any kind of work. I have got wonderful results from the Vegetable Compound and recommend it very highly to my friends. I give you permission to publish my testimonial."—Mrs. OLE BERGSTROM, 210 8th St. So., Montevideo, Minnesota.

Another Nervous Woman Finds Relief

Port Huron, Mich.—"I suffered for two years with pains in my side, and if I worked very much I was nervous and just as tired in the morning as when I went to bed. I was sleepy all the day and didn't feel like doing anything, and was so nervous I would bite my finger nails. One of my friends told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and it helped me so much that I soon felt fine."—Mrs. CHARLES BEELER, 1910 Elk Street, Port Huron, Mich.

Better Not.

Stephen Fullen, a familiar figure about the courthouse, tells a story about his niece, six years old, relates the Indianapolis Star. The niece was busily engaged memorizing a Christmas poem, aided by her proud relatives. One line of the poem went something like this:

"Old Santa comes speeding o'er the snow—"

"He'll get arrested if he don't watch out, for speeding," interrupted the little girl.

After the laughter of her admirers had quieted she suddenly spoke up.

"But Lew Shank better not arrest Santa Claus if he knows what's good for him."

DYED HER SKIRT, DRESS, SWEATER AND DRAPERIES WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her worn, shabby dresses, skirts, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything, even if she has never dyed before. Buy "Diamond Dyes"—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is sure because Diamond Dyes are guaranteed not to spot, fade, streak, or run. Tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton or mixed goods.—Advertisement.

Motor Cars in Belfast.

The 10,000 cars in the city of Belfast show that there are more cars in this city than in any other in the United Kingdom of the same size and commercial importance. Within the past nine months, 1,246 motor vehicles have been registered. The wholesale price of petrol is, however, higher than in some parts of the United Kingdom Vice Consul George H. Barringer reports to the Department of Commerce.

Cole's Carbolisalve Quickly Relieves and heals burning, itching and torturing skin diseases. It instantly stops the pain of burns. Heals without scars. 30c and 60c. Ask your druggist, or send 30c to The J. W. Cole Co., Rockford, Ill., for a package.—Advertisement.

How's Your Blood? Do You Need a Tonic?

Helena, Mont.—"Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal as a blood tonic or as a liver and stomach medicine. I was in very bad physical condition, due to having liver trouble and gastric stomach condition. My food did not digest properly, would ferment, and gas would form, giving me great distress. I also suffered with severe bilious headaches and my blood was in an impoverished state. By the use of the 'Golden Medical Discovery' I was relieved of all these conditions which had caused me so much trouble and distress. My liver became active, my food digested well, my blood was good and I felt like a new man."—Joseph A. Widmer, 307 Hoback St.

Explored Guiana Bush

C. HARRIS & EWING

Miss Lucille La Varre, eighteen, of Washington, D. C., who has just returned to her home after a trip 800 miles into the British Guiana bush with her brother, W. J. La Varre, Jr., who collects specimens for the American Museum of Natural History, the Smithsonian institution and Harvard university. Miss La Varre is the youngest woman ever to make the trip. She returned with a diamond and a pet boa constrictor.

REJECT POINCARE PLAN

Turks Call All Men to Colors—Poincare Refuses Compromise.

Constantinople—Turkey called to the colors all able bodied men in the so-called liberated territories of the near east.

The Angora government issued the mobilization decree. After waiting two days for word from Lausanne as to the Allied intentions, the Kemalists answered Greek mobilization and British fleet movements with a warlike gesture of their own.

With everything dependent upon Lausanne, the conference there remained inactive, awaiting outcome of the Paris premiers' parley on reparations.

Paris—The allied reparation conference has broken down. A British delegate leaving the conference says: "It is an amiable rupture. We are going home. France goes ahead without us."

At the premiers' conference Premier Poincare of France read what amounted to a virtual ultimatum to the British to say "yes" or "no" to the French reparations proposition or else discontinue the conference, according to a British delegate.

Before the British delegation left its headquarters it had given the impression that the reparations conference might continue another 24 or 36 hours.

HARVEY AT WHITE HOUSE

Ambassador Arrives to Advise Harding and Cabinet on Economic Status.

Washington—Ambassador Harvey was the guest of President Harding at the White House on his first visit to Washington since going to his London post.

Since his arrival from New York Colonel Harvey had made no statement on the purposes connected with his visit. Broadly he confes to lay before the Preisdent and his adviesrs the results of his close observation of the economic and other problems of Europe from the vantage point of his London post.

FRENCH TROOPS ARE MOBILIZED

Orders Commanders to Prepare for Swift Action; To Seize Mining Towns.

London—The French will march into the Ruhr valley Saturday and seize Essen and Bochum, declares a dispatch from Paris to the Daily Sketch.

Paris—The French army of occupation on the Rhine has been ordered to prepare for action.

Following swiftly on the heels of the whispered report that the army of occupation at Mayence had been ordered to "remain on the lookout," came the positive statement that orders for prompt action in Germany have been issued to French commanders.

It is now known that orders were issued for the troops of the army of occupation to be "ready at once for all events."

Military orders were promulgated, notifying all soldiers of the French armies on leave to report to their commands forthwith.

HAYWOOD, BROKEN, QUITS

Utopian Dream Bursted; "Bill" Haywood Alone and Disconsolate.

Moscow—At a meeting of the Kuzbas autonomous industrial colony, Mr. Haywood resigned the leadership, dropped the enterprise and became a plain citizen outcast from America, friendless and a failure here. Mr. Haywood, after a dramatic speech, broke down and cried like a child, his huge frame shaking and incoherent words filling his mouth.

John C. Rutgers, a Dutch engineer with New York experience, replaces Mr. Haywood as the chief director. It marks the passing of an era. Instead of Mr. Haywood's dreams of creating a Utopia in the wilds of Siberia that would startle the world and prove to everyone that Utopian dreams could be realized, Mr. Rutgers will run the Kuzbas works as a strictly engineering and business proposition.

ROAD BONDING TO FAIL

Proposal Won't Get Support of More Than Tenth of Legislators, Rockne Predicts.

St. Paul—Sale of $20,000,000 in bonds for construction of hardsurface roads in Minnesota—$10,000,000 in 1923 and a similar amount in 1924—will find "hard sledding" in the legislature, Senator A. J. Rockne, chairman of the senate finance committee, forecast in an interview.

"This proposal will not receive the support of more than 10 per cent of the members of the legislature," Mr. Rockne predicted.

Opposition to the road bonding program of the state highway department crystalized in the legislature immediately after Governor J. A. O. Preus' message was read, cautioning against further increases in tax burdens by road construction until "normal conditions were restored."

N. P. SEEK RUSS FARMERS

Exiles Are Now in Detention Camps in Germany.

Washington—Admisison into this country of a number of Russian peasants, exiled from Russia and now held in detention camps in Germany, is being sought by Northwestern interests to furnish farm labor and colonists.

Representatives of the Northern Pacific railroad, in conjunction with the Chamber of Commerce at Billings, Mont., and other cities, have taken the matter up with Secertary Davis of the Department of Labor and members of the House and State immigration committees.

BLOOD SHED IN FRENCH ADVANCE

Soldiers Fire on German Demonstrators; One Killed and Several Injured.

SITUATION IS CRITICAL

Ruhr Mine Owners Are Obeying Instructions From Berlin Not to Deliver Any Coal to Allied Engineers.

Berlin—A clash between German demonstrators and French troops occurred at the railway station at Bochum. The French fired, killing one person, and wounding several.

The incident followed political demonstrations on a big scale. Several thousand persons collected in front of the town hall where the French general had his headquarters and cheered the German republic, then marched through the streets. A number of young communists made a counter demonstration, cheering the Third Internationale and the French communist league.

The police were unable to handle the crowds and towards evening the French troops had to intervene. It was about 8 o'clock in the evening when they opened fire near the railway station.

Refuse to Deliver Coal.

Essen—The deadlock involving the complete breakdown of all negotiations in the economic field between the Frency occupying authorities and the German magnates in the Ruhr is creating a critical situation which the French will meet with penalties—military, economic, and financial. The exact nature of the penalties the French general staff refuses to disclose, saying that instructions from Paris are being awaited.

In the meantime the military occupation of Bochum and Gelsenkirchem has been completed according to plans.

Given 24 Hours to Change Mind.

Paris—The allied engineers commission at Essen, acting in agreement with the French government, has decided, because of French information received, to suspend for 24 hours the order given for the requisition at the pitheads of the coal due the reparations account. There is ground for hope that the mine owners will withdraw their decision, to comply with orders from Berlin to cease coal deliveries of coal and coke to France.

The French and Belgian troops now occupy the whole Ruhr basin and have reached the limits of that neutral zone, 30 miles in depth, in which the Germans are barred from having reichswehr or regular garrisons. The troops are at the gates of Dortmund where they were ordered to stop for the present.

NORRIS BILL MEETS DEFEAT

Senate Action Is Declared Death Blow to Bill.

Washington—Such progress has been made by the senate in consideration of farm credits legislation that managers predict a vote early this week on the Capper bill, the first of the farmer relief measures to be taken up.

The credit legislation, pending in the form of two bills, was taken up after the administration shipping bill, in accordance with plans of Republican leaders, had been laid aside temporarily by unanimous consent to make way for the farmers' measures. Although the senate made a slow start in considering the legislaltion, it later went forward at accelerated speed, and as a result, it was said both bills might be passed this week.

Before proceeding with the Capper measure, the senate took action which was said to mean defeat of the Norris bill proposing a government corporation to buy and sell agricultural products. Senator Norris (Rep., Neb.) objecting to immediate consideration of the farm credits bills, demanded that his bill, which was reported several weeks before the credit legislation, be taken up first. His motion, however, was defeated, 53 to 19. Mr. Norris said the defeat meant the loss of his bill during the present congress.

STANDARD OIL MAKES PRICE

Washington—Control of oil prices, particularly gasoline, by the Standard group of companies, was charged by representatives of independent oil concerns at the senate oil investigation.

Appearing in the inquiry for the first time, the independents one after another presented grievances against practices of the companies commonly dscribed as belonging to the Standard group.

Chicago "U" Head Resigns.

Chicago—Harry Pratt Judson, president of the University of Chicago since 1907, has resigned, effective February 20, the sixteenth anniversary of his elevation to the position, it was announced here at the close of a meeting of the university senate. The board of trustees, the statement said, has offered the acting presidency to Ernest D. Burton, head of the department of new testament and early Christian literature and director of the libraries, who has accepted it.

TELLS OTHERS OF ITS GREAT VALUE

In Nursing Sick, Mrs. Patten States, She Often Recommends Tanlac—Thinks It Wonderful.

"I firmly believe Tanlac is what keeps me so well and strong," is the high tribute paid the medicine, recently, by Mrs. Edith J. Patten, widely known and esteemed resident of 560 Cumberland Ave., Portland, Me.

"When I began the use of Tanlac I had not felt right for a long time and was all run down. After persistently taking the treatment considered best for such a condition I got no better. In fact I seemed to be growing worse until a lady friend insisted on me trying Tanlac.

"At that time I took two or three bottles and was perfectly well again. Since then I have taken a bottle two or three times a year and no one could feel better. I have done lots of nursing of the sick, and since Tanlac did so much for me I have been the cause of many others taking it—always with splendid results. It is with this knowledge and experience that I recommend Tanlac as a wonderful medicine."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

KNEW WHAT HE WAS DOING

Obvious Advantage in This Gentleman's Manner of Wearing His Diamond Ring.

The gentleman, obviously of Hebrew extraction, had assembled his friends round the festive board. After having discussed satisfactorily the various delicacies provided for their delectation they were called upon to admire and appraise all his new and numerous possessions. But of all the latter the one of which he was most proud was a truly magnificent ring, which, however, was so turned as to display the diamond on the inside of his hand.

"Vy, Isaac," he said, "it is a good ring—I never saw a better. But it is on the wrong way round."

Isaac gave him a look of eloquent pitying contempt.

"Oh, what nonsense you do tell me," he replied. "I ask you, Cohen, Does one talk like this (holding out his hands, palm downwards), or like this?" (palm upwards).—Buffalo Express.

British Columbian Honey.

More than 700,000 pounds of honey were harvested in British Columbia in 1922, compilations made by the provincial apiarist show. Fifty-three tons were contributed by the Kootenay bees, the Okanogan and Thompson valleys yielding another fifty. From Vancouver island and the Gulf islands twenty-nine tons were gathered, while twenty-four tons were harvested from Greater Vancouver, and Westminster. The populous Fraser valley produced more than half of the total yield, accounting for nearly two hundred tons.

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. It is in no sense a medicine. And like pure water it is harmless and pleasant.

Nujol is prescribed by physicians; used in leading hospitals. Get a bottle from your druggist today.—Advertisement.

ALL HE WANTED TO KNOW

Merchant Evidently Believed in the Saying, "It Isn't What You Used to Be."

Some time ago a young man went to a great store in Chicago to apply for a position and was fortunate enough to be shown into the office of the merchant prince himself, to whom he stated the object of his call.

The merchant was favorably impressed with his appearance and address, and after asking him a few questions relative to his business experience, promised him a place in his employ. But the caller, who evidently had expected to be more rigorously catechized, thought it best to volunteer additional information.

"If you wish," he began, "to know something of my antecedents—"

"I don't care to know anything about your antecedents, young man," interrupted the merchant with a smile. "If your subsequents are all right, you'll do. You may report to Mr. Smith next Monday."—From Everybody's Magazine.

WAR TAUGHT PEOPLE THRIFT

One Good Effect, at Least, Came as Result of the Gigantic World Conflict.

While Christmas savings clubs originated about 15 years ago, the World war is credited with the tremendous growth recently in the number of depositors, and, of course, the totals of savings.

The weekly payment system for Liberty bonds, regular purchases of Thrift and War Savings stamps and more or less regular frequent contributions to the war funds got the average American into the habit of putting aside something out of the pay envelope.

"Employers adopted the system of taking the payments out of the salary, and as the amounts were only a dollar or two a week, it wasn't missed so much," explained a Hyde Park banker to the Woman. "When it was all over employees generally realized how easy it was to save. They just got the habit, and the Christmas club idea was almost doubled in a year's time, 1920 to 1921, in membership."

This year there were 5,000,000 depositors and deposits of $190,000,000.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Seventy-eight ($78.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Harold M. Hicks and Emily A. Hicks, his wife, Mortgagors, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 16th day of July 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 23rd day of July 1919, at one o'clock P. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 130.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, to Helen S. Winton by written assignment dated the 26th day of July 1919, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 6th day of August 1919, at Two o'clock P. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages on page 562.

And Whereas, The said Helen S. Winton, the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 ($1398.28) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from the 21st day of December 1922, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof;

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of section Thirty-four (34); and the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of the Northwest Quarter (N W1-4), and the West half (W1-2) of the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing One Hundred Sixty acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 10th day of February 1923, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

Hall's Catarrh Medicine

Those who are in a "run down" condition will notice that Catarrh bothers them much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE consists of an Ointment which Quickly Relieves by local application, and the Internal Medicine, a Tonic, which assists in improving the General Health. A NEW story, bringing in John Bartley, investigator of crimes. The talented detective, returned from secret service work in the war, was immediately engaged by the governor of the state to ferret out some facts in connection with an application for a pardon.

It seemed a small case, hardly justifying the employment of such a prominent sleuth, yet it led to something big; to a mystery which, for a time, baffled all of his keen abilities. Those who read a detective story in order to match their wits against the author's, will find a rare treat in this new serial.

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT WORK

Gained Strength, Weight and Now Doing Own Work, by Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Marion, Ind.—"I was all run-down, nervous and bent over. I could hardly drag around, let alone do my work. I read some letters in the papers telling what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had done for others and I thought I would try it. Then a man told my husband about his wife and what good it had done her and wanted him to have me try it. I took one bottle and could see what it did for me in a week's time, and when I had taken three bottles I had gained both in strength and weight and was doing my own work. I took it before my last baby was born and it helped me so much. I sure am glad to recommend the Vegetable Compound to any woman who suffers from female ailments, for I know by experience what it can do. I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash, also the Liver Pills, too, and think them fine."—Mrs. WM. ELDRIDGE, 620 E. Grant Street, Marion, Indiana.

A record of nearly fifty years service should convince you of the merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

MYSTERY ON MYSTERY

"The district attorney rose to his feet, saying slowly, 'I am going to call Briffeur, who was chauffeur for Mr. Slyke. He will—'

• • • • • • •

"Someone pushed back a chair, and then suddenly, rising above all else and ringing through the room with a horror that seemed to glue me to my seat, came a shriek of terror. It was sustained for a second, then died away in a long, sobbing moan.

• • • • • • •

"Bartley dropped to his knees beside Roche and gave one searching look at the man, then straightened up with a queer expression on his face. He pointed silently to the chuffeur. On his brown coat, slowly darkening and widening, was a splotch of blood, and from his breast protruded the hilt of a knife."

Here's an enthralling mystery story that piles mystery on mystery. Bartley, the famous criminologist, undertakes to establish the guilt or innocence of two convicts in prison for the attempted burglary of the house of Robert Slyke. Almost immediately thereafter Slyke is mysteriously murdered, and then, at the inquest, Briffeur, his suspected chauffeur, is stabbed to death in the midst of a roomful of people.

The author is Charles J. Dutton, a new writer, who made a name with "The Underwood Mystery."

—1—

In Which an Old Crime Again Comes to Light.

That Friday afternoon, as I came up the steps of John Bartley's house in Gramercy square, the sun was shining for the first time in seven days. Unlocking the door, I entered the hall and went up the stairs to my room.

This week of rain in the middle of June had spoiled Bartley's long-planned fishing trip, and had kept us in the city. It was a trip he had been looking forward to for a long time, since in the past few years there had been few opportunities for such things. In fact, since 1917 Bartley had passed very few nights in his own house. About a year before we went into the war, those who followed criminal mysteries noticed that Bartley's name was no longer connected with the solution of crime. Perhaps they wondered a little at this. When the full story of the work of the Secret Service in the war is told, recognition will be given to the part he played in bringing it to a victorious conclusion. Until then, all I can say is that when he returned to New York, in the spring of 1920, his work for the government had ended.

The first thing that he did upon his arrival was to clear up a pile of mail that ran back for several weeks; his next was to plan several weeks' fishing in the lakes of northern Maine. On the very day that we were to start it had commenced to rain, and never ceased for seven days. Telegrams told us that in Maine it was raining, too. In sheer disgust Bartley buried himself in his library and went to work on his long-neglected book, "The Galante Literature of the Eighteenth Century."

As I glanced out of the window of my room that Friday afternoon, I saw that the rain was at last over. I was wondering whether Bartley would go to Maine, after all, when there came a rap at my door. Opening it, I found Rance, Bartley's old colored man, who said with a grin, "Mr. John says, Mr. Pelt, that you are to come down to the library, for that man Rogers is coming."

As I followed him down the stairs, I wondered what it was that was bringing Rogers, chief of the Central office, to the house at this time of the afternoon. Although Rogers and Bartley were the best of friends, and the chief had been forced more than once to ask the aid of Bartley in his cases, he usually made his visits in the evening, after the day's work was over. A call at four in the afternoon seemed to promise that something unusual had happened, something of such importance that it could not wait. Could he secure Bartley's aid? I knew that Bartley had not intended to take up any more cases until he had had a long rest. Still, if Rogers had the problem of some unusual crime to lay before us, he might change his plans.

Bartley was at his great desk when I entered the library. He gave me a smile, then went on examining the books which covered its top. That morning he had received a great box from his French dealer, and he was busy with its contents. As he did not speak, I dropped into the great armchair by his side.

As I looked at him I wondered, as I had done so many times before, that he should be the great criminal investigator that he was. It was the last thing anyone would expect him to be. His breeding, his family, and above all his literary tastes, were not such as one would expect to find in a man who makes the running down of criminals his life work. His fine face with its clear-cut features, telling of a long line of New England ancestors, might have been a bishop's, one that loved dogs and children, and who had a heart bigger than his creed. I picked up one of the six thin, narrow books in heavy gray paper covers that lay before him, and glanced at the title, "The Ragionamenti of the Divine Aretino." I was about to open it when the doorbell rang.

Bartley glanced up at the sound and said, "That must be Rogers."

The next moment, Rance, bowing as he always did in announcing anyone, ushered Rogers into the room. Rogers had been at the head of the Central office for about five years. In that time he had built up for himself the finest reputation that any city detective had ever had. He was not a brilliant man, nor, for that matter, an educated one, but his rare common sense and his absolute honesty had won for him the respect of the people of the city.

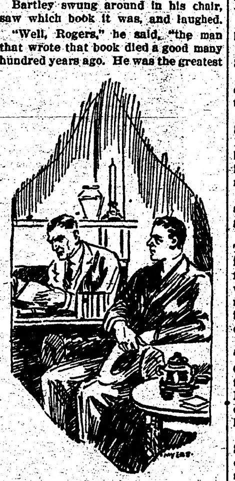
He took a chair, and after saying, "Hello, John," to Bartley and a word to me, he took a cigar from the box that Bartley pushed over to him.

Then, leaning across the table, he picked up one of the volumes. The book fell open at a picture; he started as he looked at it, then handed it to me with a sly wink.

"That's a fine sort of a book to show an honest and moral police officer. If I found a bookseller on the Avenue with one, I would have him pinched."

Bartley swung around in his chair, saw which book it was, and laughed.

"Well, Rogers," he said, "the man that wrote that book died a good many hundred years ago. He was the greatest adventurer of his day, the first real blackmailer, a man that made his living by his wits. Also, he happened to be a poet and dramatist, as well as a rogue."



As He Did Not Speak, I Dropped Into the Great Armchair by His Side.

Rogers took his cigar from his mouth and responded with a grin, "What we call today a crook."

I could see that there was something on the chief's mind, but just what it was we were not to learn for some time. He talked, first about the rain, then about the baseball team, in fact of everything but the purpose that had brought him. That was his way, as we both knew. It was not until he had lighted a second cigar and had been silent several moments that he turned to Bartley and said:

"John, I have a case for you."

Bartley threw me a quick glance, then answered, "But you know, Rogers, I don't care to take up any more cases until I have been away fishing and had a good rest."

The chief nodded, but added, "Well, this won't be much of a case. It's not my affair, anyway. I happened to see the governor the other day, and he asked me to get you to look into the matter and make him a report."

I glanced at Bartley. The governor of the state did not, as a rule, interest himself in criminal matters. If this was a case that he wished Bartley to investigate, then it must be something very unusual, indeed. By the little gleam of interest in his eyes, I could see that he agreed with me.

"What is the case?" he asked.

"Well," answered Rogers after a short pause, "I don't suppose you know anything about it; though you may have seen it mentioned in the papers since you returned. It all started a year ago. It was a robbery."

Bartley gave a little exclamation of disgust. "You know that robbery cases are out of my line. There is never anything of interest in them. Besides, a robbery that took place a year ago must be all settled by this time."

Rogers took his cigar from his lips, tried to blow a smoke-ring, failed, and simply said, "Well, the two chaps that they say committed this robbery are now in jail with a seven years' stretch over them.

"You know, John, after all, I don't know such a devil of a lot about this thing myself. I got mixed up in it by accident. I happened to see the governor on another matter; and when I had finished my business, he told me he had received a good many letters asking him to pardon the men that were in jail for the Circle Lake robbery. Many of these letters were from lawyers, in which they said that, after they had read the evidence, they doubted if the men were guilty. Also, one of these reform societies has got mixed up in the thing. The governor had read the evidence brought out at the trial, and he believed himself that the men might not be guilty of the robbery. Then he asked me if you were in the city; and, when I said 'Yes,' he suggested that I ask you to look into the affair. If you, after having investigated the matter, think the men are innocent, then he will pardon them. He said, also, that there was some sort of a fund from which he could pay your fee."

Bartley gave me a curious look, then turned to Rogers. "That part's all right, Rogers. Only I haven't the faintest idea what you are talking about. Of course, I know where Circle Lake is. It's near Saratoga. A friend of mine has a summer place there. But beyond that, I have no idea what you are driving at. Why not start at the beginning and tell me what this crime was?"

With a grin the chief started at the beginning of the story.

"Of course, you know who Robert Slyke is?"

Bartley nodded; but, seeing that I did not recognize the name, he turned to me.

"Pelt, don't you remember the Wall Street broker who announced at a Billy Sunday meeting that he had been converted, and that he was going to give back to his clients the money they had lost in his office?"

Both Bartley and Rogers laughed, and the latter commented, "He never gave it back."

"No," said Bartley, "he never did. That conversion did not stick. Slyke is a strange sort of a chap. His friends are few and there have been wild rumors as to where he got his money. He has dabbled a bit in spiritualism, and has been fooled by several mediums."

Rogers nodded in agreement. "That's the chap. He has a place at Circle Lake. He has lived there for the last two years all the year round. No one knows exactly why he left the city, but it is said that he has lost a lot of money in stocks."

He paused, then continued, "It was Slyke who had the robbery. Early one morning, about a year ago, his step-daughter came to his room and said there were burglars downstairs. He jumped from his bed, and, without any weapon, rushed down the stairs, while the girl stayed on the top step. From then on, it becomes mixed up."

"Mixed up?" asked Bartley.

"Yes. Just what took place and how many men were in the room at the time, was a point of dispute at the trial. The girl says she is sure—that is, almost sure—there were two men in the room. On the other hand, Slyke says there was only one; though, he added, there might have been a second man whom he did not see. There was a bit of a struggle, and the men jumped out of an open window and got away."

Bartley, who had listened carefully, asked, "They did not get anything?"

"No, not a thing. The safe in the room was unopened."

"Are these men," asked Bartley, "the ones that are serving the seven years' sentence?"

Rogers paused long enough to light another cigar, and throw back his head to watch the smoke curl to the ceiling before he replied, "That's the big question."

He was silent for a moment, then continued:

"After the burglars got out of the window, Slyke called up the city police and also the state police. When the city police arrived at the house they made no arrests. But early that same morning the state police picked up two men about six miles away on the other side of Saratoga. They were both well-known characters who had been in trouble before. One of the men had a slight bruise on his head. Slyke claimed that in the struggle he hit one of the robbers with a cane. Both men refused to say where they had been during the night. The strange thing about it was that they were taken to their own homes before being locked up. When they were searched, the police found nothing on them whatever."

Mrs. Gross Praises Tanlac for Overcoming Stomach Trouble —Says Results Are Priceless.

"Before I took Tanlac I only weighed ninety-four pounds and scarcely had strength to sweep the floor; but now I weigh one hundred and thirty-two and am as healthy and happy as can be." This remarkable statement was made, recently, by Mrs. Mabel Gross, 1137 Aldrich St., N., Minneapolis, Minn.

"For nearly two years I had been in a seriously weakened condition and suffered nearly all the time from headache and backache. My nerves were beyond my control and I was terribly dizzy. I couldn't half sleep and my stomach was so out of order that even the sight of food nauseated me.

"The benefits I have received from Tanlac are priceless. I am now a perfectly well woman and my friends often speak of how healthy I look. Health is worth everything, and that is what Tanlac has meant to me."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

ART IN ADJUSTING THE VEIL

Thread of Fine Darning Wool Run Through Silk Face Covering Solves Problem.

The principal difficulty with a face veil is putting it on, and this requires much practice before it can be adjusted correctly every time. The first rule is to get a silk veil, as cotton ones never set well, and to run a thread of fine darning wool through the top to tighten it slightly and keep it firm.

Wool has a certain amount of elasticity and will not tear the veil as a cotton thread would do with any strain. Then find the exact center of the veil and put it against the face, allowing about two inches to spare below the chin, or if one chooses that the chin not be covered bring the veil just to the end of the chin and shape the veil round the hat. The bottom ends must be drawn closely around the top of the throat and fastened to the hair on either side of the back with hairpins, taking care the center of the veil is not pulled to one side and the ends drawn round as closely as possible without pulling anywhere, and tied, and the little bits tucked in so that they will not blow about. A veil well arranged in this way will keep tidy and smart all day, the pins at the back being taken out to allow food to be eaten.

Filmy Frocks Call for Ribbons.

On chiffon and soft evening gowns, girdles of narrow velvet, soft satin or metallic ribbons combined with little French flowers at the top of the streamers which fall in profusion on each side, or from a large corsage on one side of the front are being shown.

Three-Piece Costumes.

Three-piece costumes of marleen and veldyne have straight-line frocks with tops of brocaded crepe de chine. They have round neck-lines and practically no trimming.

Satin Petal Neckpiece.

If one tires of the inevitable neck piece of fur there are delightful arrangements of satin petals in various colors.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Owatonna—An average of approximately 800 Steel county women have attended each of the four days' sessions of the Community Cooking School.

Owatonna—A community cooking school, with Miss Vera M. Megowen of Columbia university and Miss Irma I. Mundy of the Chicago Institute of Fine Arts as instructors, will open here.

Red Wing—By a vote of 45 to 13 stockholders in the Red Wing Co-operative creamery decided to change the organization from a co-operative to a stock company.

Pipestone—At the annual sale held at Faramont Hereford farms 23 head of cattle were sold at an average price of $126 per head. The high price paid was $270. Many Hereford breeders were attracted by the sale.

Hackensack—A fire of undetermined origin raged through the business section of this place, causing heavy damage to the main street. Five structures were destroyed.

Barnesville—Adam Sakry, a farmer, reported that he had discovered traces of oil in the water from his flowing well. His well is 112 feet deep and is located on the banks of a creek.

Mankato—Extensive preparations are being made by the Blue Earth County Farm Bureau and various breeding associations in the county for conducting a "better sire campaign" throughout the county.

Faribault—George W. Murray, who for the last five years has been operating the Brunswick hotel, has bought the property from John W. Schultz. It is announced by Mr. Murray that he will erect a new hotel immediately north of the present structure.

St. Vincent—A cash prize of $50, in addition to any bounties collected, has been offered to the person killing the most wolves or coyotes. The beasts have become so troublesome in this section that it was decided to make it an object for men to go out and track them down.

Owatonna—Minneasota dairymen brought the 45th annual convention of the State Dairymen's association to a close after adoption of a program for further progress and an extension of its activities this year.

Hibbing—Making use of what they had gained through fire drills and marching out of a mine in an orderly manner, between 40 and 50 miners escaped suffocation and possibly death when a fire of undetermined origin broke out in the Leetonia underground mine.

Olivia—Although believing its work of considerable importance in the community the Renville county board has decided to abolish the child welfare department. The commissioners feel the people demand more economy in county affairs and made cuts in the salaries of the number of county officers in addition to abolishing the work of the child welfare supervisor.

Crookston—Secretaries of the county fair associations of Marshall, Polk, Kittson and Norman counties met here to form a fair circuit and fix fair dates for next summer that will allow each fair to show the same attraction. Contracts were signed up with a number of amusement companies. The Northwestern or Crookston fair also may join the new circuit. The four fairs already banded together are those at Ada, Hallock, Warren and Fertile.

Duluth—A request that Attorney General Hilton be instructed to take an appeal from the decision of the state railroad and warehouse commission granting an increase in telephone rates in Duluth is contained in a resolution unanimously adopted by the city council. The request follows the ruling of District Judge W. A. Cant, holding that only the attorney general could institute proceedings in the case.

Duluth—Alleging malicious slander, Mrs. Sarah McAlpine, widow of the late John McAlpine, Duluth lumberman, and her son, Dale McAlpine, filed suit in district court againts Mrs. Mattie B. Titus. Mrs. McAlpine seeks $25,000, while Dale has brought suit for $50,000. Mrs. Titus accused them of being connected with the death of Mr. McAlpine, who was found dead in the basement of his home Oct. 14, 1913, with a bullet wound in his breast.

St. Paul—The Minnesota State Dental Association will hold its Fortieth Annual Meeting in the Saint Paul Auditorium February 6, 7, 8, and 9, 1923. A program of lectures and clinics, covering all of the phases of dentistry, will be presented by men of the highest type in their respective fields. Several nationally known clinicians from outside of the State will appear on the program. A program for Dental Nurses and Assistants has been arranged, to which all Dental Nurses and Assistants are invited.

Rochester—A gain of 43 per cent in the business of the Rochester postoffice is noted for 1922 by Postmaster D. L. Williams. The total amount of business done at the Rochester postoffice last year was $102,799.14. In 1912 the business amounted to only $41,564.96.

St. James—The sheriff's office of Watonwan county has been run at a profit to the county in the year 1922, according to reports from Sheriff J. C. Bermel. Amount collected from delinquent tax warrants and fines exceeds the salaries of the sheriff and his deputy.

Addressing the House.

It may be believed that Mr. Scrymgeour has made a new record by addressing the house as "Friends," though there have been some famous departures from the strict rule of "Mr. Speaker, sir." Pitt once addressed the speaker as "My dear sir," to the scandal of the precisians. Macaulay was very indignant with a new member of opposite views who was guilty of "Ladies and Gentlemen," and one has heard a tale of a member who addressed the house as "Gentlemen," and was sternly called to order.—London Daily Chronicle.

DYED HER BABY'S COAT, A SKIRT AND CURTAINS WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her old, worn, faded things new. Even if she has never dyed before, she can put a new, rich color into shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything. Buy Diamond Dyes—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed. Just tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade or run.—Advertisement.

Ancient Mine Workings.

A discovery of considerable archeological interest has been made 30 miles north of the Leeupoort tin mines in the Transvaal, near the Bechuanaland border.

A prospector has unearthed what is apparently a portion of an ancient smelting plant and a quantity of slag, which is being submitted to expert examination.

Nearby were old workings and a substantial body of ore containing a whitish metal, thought to be platinum or molybdenum. Mining engineers have left for the scene of the discovery.

NO CANARIES IN CANARIES

Marines Who Had Expected to Stock Up There Met With Some Disappointment.

Canaries are scarcer than hens' teeth in the Canary islands, according to the United States marines of the cruiser Pittsburgh, who arrived at Gibraltar recently after a visit to Las Palmas, the principal seaport of those islands.

The marines expected to find canaries hopping all over the islands, waiting for salt to be sprinkled on their tails. Disillusionment came with their first visit ashore.

The islands got their name from canis, the Latin name for dog, and the marines say there are fewer canaries in the Canaries than their are snakes in Ireland.

Relatives and sweethearts of the sea soldiers who were promised a shipment of feathered songsters at an early date will now have to wait until the marines have an opportunity to visit a bird store in the United States.

Any marine on the Pittsburgh is ready to sell a canary cage for a song.—From Letter to the Philadelphia Evening Public Ledger.

Settled.

"Well, want to marry my daughter, I suppose," snapped the grumpy old millionaire as he glowered at the young man before him. Then, adjusting his glasses, he added: "By the way, aren't you one of my daughter's former suitors?"

"N-n-no, sir," faltered the timid youth.

"Well, you are now," said the old grouch as he turned away. "Get out!"—Boston Transcript.

NOT THAT KIND OF A BAT

Humanitarian Needlessly Alarmed Over Action Which He Thought Savored of Cruelty.

The man was a vegetarian and believed that his mission was to safeguard every animal, bird and fish which required protection. One day he came upon a group of boys throwing stones up into a tree. He decided to protest.

"What are you doing, boys?" he asked.

They stopped and stared at him.

"Come! Is it a squirrel, or a bird."

"No, sir," replied one of the boys. "It's a bat."

"Poor bat!" cried the man. "And why do you molest it? Has a bat no right to live? Has it not the same right to existence as yourself? What has the bat done that you should hurl stones at it"

"Please, sir," interrupted the boy, "this is a baseball bat we were throwing at the nuts."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

Just a Simple Matter.

"If I ask for 'est one thing, mother, can I be sure to get it?" quietly spoke Elise, the four-year-old member of the household. Mother, with an air of relief, said: "Yes, mother promises that you shall have one thing you want, but you must not ask for anything else."

"All 'wight," lisped the darling. "I want 'est a toy store."

News to Him.

"My wife has been nursing a grouch for a week." "That so? I didn't know you were ill."

GOT OLD GENTLEMANS "GOAT"

College Boy's Expression Made Him Fear Money Had Been Wasted on His Education.

Whenever old Eben Toothaker doesn't understand what you say he says, "What say?" So do his neighbors. It is not strange that he doesn't understand his college boy son's way of asking the same question.

Old Eben's wife noticed that he was somewhat depressed the evening after the boy had got back to the farm from his first year at college. "What's the matter, Eben?" she asked.

"Mary, I've spent $900 on that boy's education, and I'm afraid it's wasted," said Eben. "He don't know as much as he did when he went to college."

"Why, what do you mean, father?"

"Well, tonight I said to him that it looked to me 'sif it might rain tomorrow, and what do ye s'pose he said?"

"Why, I don't know. What did he say?"

"Well, sir, he begged my pardon!"—Youth's Companion.

Endangers Fur Animals.

According to Dr. William T. Hornaday it takes 80 skins to make the average mink wrap, 200 for a squirrel coat and 280 for a black mole coat, 90 skins may go to the making of a striped skunk jacket, and 300 to a Siberian ermine wrap. Before many years, if the present rate of slaughter continues, many of our most interesting animals will be practically extinct; even now the trapper is forced rather afield, and skins once unmarketable are being used to supply the deficiency.—Scientific American.

Nerves of Steel—

The successful man of today is clear-headed, self-reliant. His keen eye and steady hand result from abundant, self-controlled energy, and steady nerves.

Such a man can overcome difficulties because he is physically fit. Foolish habits of food and drink have no place in his scheme of things. When he finds that coffee disagrees he promptly changes to healthful POSTUM.

This pure cereal beverage is not only free from the health-disturbing drug element in coffee, but there's comfort and satisfaction in its delicious, full-bodied flavor.

You'll find Postum a factor for Health.

"There's a Reason"

Your grocer sells Postum in two forms: Instant Postum (in tins) prepared instantly in the cup by the addition of boiling water. Postum Cereal (in packages) for those who prefer to make the drink while the meal is being prepared; made by boiling fully 20 minutes.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed and delivered by Oliver Martin, a single man, Mortgagor to Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1920, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of March 1920, at 9:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages on Page 615, and

Whereas, the said Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee and holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and whereas there is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $1777.80, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is Hereby Given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southeast Quarter (SE1-4), East Half (E1-) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) and Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-three (33) in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty-four (44) West, except that piece or parcel or strip of land 100 feet wide, being 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste Marie Railway track as the same is now located across the S1-2SW1-4 of Section 33, 157-44, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 24th day of February 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $1777.80, and interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

Attorney for Mortgagee

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Seventy-eight ($78.00) Dollars, which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice, upon a certain Mortgage, duly executed and delivered by Harold M. Hicks and Emily A. Hicks, his wife, Mortgagors, to Hoag Security Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of Minnesota, Mortgagee, bearing date the 16th day of July 1919, and with a power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 23rd day of July 1919, at one o'clock P. M., in Book 92 of Mortgages, on page 130.

Which said Mortgage, together with the debt secured thereby, was duly assigned by said Hoag Security Company, a corporation, Mortgagee, to Helen S. Winton by written assignment dated the 26th day of July 1919, and recorded in the office of said Register of Deeds, on the 6th day of August 1919, at Two o'clock P. M., in Book 90 of Mortgages on page 562.

And Whereas, The said Helen S. Winton, the Assignee and Holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice, under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained; and whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice the sum of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 ($1398.28) Dollars, with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent per annum from the 21st day of December 1922, and whereas the said power of sale has become operative, and no action or proceeding having been instituted, at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage, or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is Hereby Given, That by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in in such case made and provided, the said Mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz:

The Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast Quarter (SE1-4) of section Thirty-four (34); and the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of the Northwest Quarter (NW1-4), and the West half (W1-2) of the Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-five (35), in Township One Hundred Fifty-five (155) North of Range Thirty-nine (39) West of the Fifth Principal Meridian, containing One Hundred Sixty acres more or less according to the United States Government survey thereof, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of said Marshall County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 10th day of February 1923, at eleven o'clock A. M., of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of Thirteen Hundred Ninety-eight and 28-100 Dollars, and interest, and the taxes, if any, on said premises, and Seventy-five Dollars, Attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said Mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale, as provided by law.

A NEW story, bringing in John Bartley, investigator of crimes. The talented detective, returned from secret service work in the war, was immediately engaged by the governor of the state to ferret out some facts in connection with an application for a pardon.

It seemed a small case, hardly justifying the employment of such a prominent sleuth, yet it led to something big; to a mystery which, for a time, baffled all of his keen abilities. Those who read a detective story in order to match their wits against the author's, will find a rare treat in this new serial.

TEACHER PAYS IT GLOWING TRIBUTE

Declares Tanlac Ended Indigestion, Chest Pains and Palpitation—Lost Strength Restored.

"Tanlac has improved my general condition ten times more than I anticipated," recently stated Herbert A. Guptill, a well-known school teacher of Kezar Falls, Maine.

"My trouble began with a sudden loss of strength. Almost everything I ate disagreed with me and caused a sickening sensation that remained with me for hours. For months I found breathing difficult on account of indigestion, and had such chest pains and palpitation I thought my heart was affected. I also suffered greatly from headaches and nervousness, seldom slept well, and felt tired and worn-out all the time.

"Since taking Tanlac no kind of food hurts me and I have a wonderful appetite. I have gained ten pounds, breathe freely, sleep perfectly, and feel as strong and well as ever in my life. Tanlac is certainly a superior medicine."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

HELP FOR GIRLS WHO WORK

Mrs. Lodic Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Her

Tyrone, Pa.—"A friend told my husband how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had helped his wife, so my husband bought me a bottle because I was so run-down, had a nervous weakness, no strength in my body and pains in my left side so bad that I could hardly do my work. Before I was married I used to work in the factory, and I had pains just the same then as I have had since I have done my housework. I would not be without a bottle in the house now. It has stopped the pains all right and I have found out that it is a wonderful body builder, as it has made me well and strong. It is going to be the 'old reliable' with me hereafter, and I am always willing to tell other women how it has helped me. You can use this letter as you wish as I can honestly say that my words are true."—Mrs. M. LODIC, R.F.D. No. 4, Box 40, Tyrone, Pa.

"A FRAME-UP?"

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga. Bartley is asked, in view of recent developments, to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Rogers, chief of the central office, arrives as Bartley and his friend Pelt, a newspaper man, are preparing to go on a fishing trip, and begins to describe the case.

Bartley was interested. He took up his pipe, lighted it, and leaning back in his chair, listened attentively as Rogers continued.

"When it came time for the men to be identified, there was a bit of a conflict. The step-daughter was pretty sure that there had been two men, while Slyke insisted that he had only seen one. In fact, he did not seem to be very eager to push the case—even requested the police to drop it, since he had lost nothing."

Bartley asked in surprise, "Then why, under heaven, did they keep on with it?"

Rogers shook his head. "I don't know, John. It has been suggested that the city police did not want to drop it. Anyway, they held the men; and a few days later announced that they had found a piece of paper torn from a newspaper in the room where Slyke had discovered them. Several days later they announced that they had found a newspaper with a torn corner in Horn's pocket, into which the piece that they had found at Slyke's house fitted."

Bartley asked with a weary air, "Did they later find a piece of cloth torn from the coat or trousers of one of the men? Find it, perhaps, on a bush near the window the men had jumped out of?"

Rogers gave his friend a startled look.

"I thought you had never heard of the case? They did find such a piece of cloth."

Bartley half laughed. "I never heard a word of it until you told me. I had an idea that a piece of cloth would be found that had been torn from the clothing of one of them. A piece that would fit, say, the torn trousers of one of them."

Rogers threw me a look, as if to ask how Bartley could have guessed, then remarked, "I don't see how you hit it off, John; but that's the very thing that did happen. All this did not come out until the trial. When it was introduced, it made a stir. Both men claimed, in fact, that the whole thing was a frame-up."

He paused to relight his cigar before continuing:

"The man to whom the trousers belonged asserted that they had been taken from him the week after he had been put in jail, and that there was no tear in them when he gave them up. A tailor at the trial testified that the cloth was so strong that it could not have been torn away by catching on anything, and that it looked to him as if the piece had been cut out with a knife."

Bartley threw back his head and laughed. Rogers was thoroughly displeased. "I don't see the joke."

"There is no joke, Rogers. Tell me who found all this evidence? Was it the police?"

"I am not sure. I think it was the head of the local police. It was a day or so after the crime that most of it was discovered."

I broke in to say, "I presume the men claimed the police faked the evidence?"

Rogers nodded. "That's just what they did claim. In fact, their whole defense was on that line. They were said to have been night-fishing on a game preserve near the lake. A good deal was made of the fact that the incriminating evidence was not found until some hours after the crime—even days in fact. I admit that it looks a bit fishy. Still, you never heard of the police faking evidence to the extent they claim this was done."

We both laughed and our laughter made the red face of the chief turn a shade darker. We had in mind the charges that one of the newspapers was making at the time against his own detectives, that they had planted guns on some men they wished to hold. But even at that, he was right. The police do not fake evidence to the extent that this story of his seemed to hint. Bartley's next remark showed that he felt as I did.

"You are right, Rogers, though the whole thing does look queer. I take it the conviction made a stir."

Rogers shook his head. "It did not at the time; it's doing it now. The papers thought the men's denial was the usual thing. But later the lawyers got interested, then a reform society, and now they are all getting after the governor. He thinks there might have been a miscarriage of justice and wants you to look into the thing. He wants you to do it at once."

With a shrewd look, Bartley asked, "Then there is something new?"

"Well," answered Rogers, "that depends. The other night there was another attempt to break into Slyke's house. They say there have been several since these men went to jail."

Bartley said but one word, but it was expressive enough. We sat in silence until Rogers pulled out his watch, glanced at it, and rose to his feet. "Time I ran along. That's the way it stands. The governor wishes you to look into it, and says he will consider it a personal favor if you will do so."

Bartley also rose, and placing his hand on his friend's shoulder, said, "I will deal with the case at once, but in my own way. Tell him he won't hear from me until I have found out whether those two men ought to be in prison or not."

Roger nodded, and after a second glance at his watch hurried out. Bartley said, "Pelt, over in the bookcase, in the section of the trials, you will find a small brown book. It's somewhere in the third section, under the letter 'E.' The title is, I think, 'The Edlingham Burglary'."

Wondering a little why he should want it, I went over to the portion of the bookcase he had indicated. In a moment I had found the volume that he wanted—a thin book, covered with brown cloth, and on the title page

The Famous Edlingham Burglary or
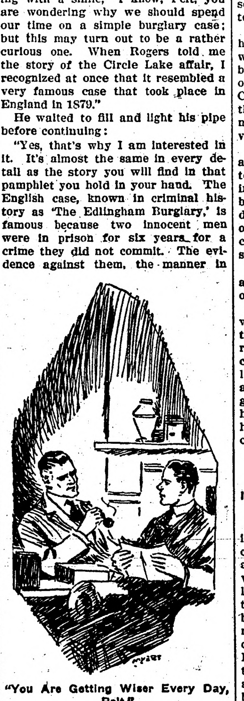
The Innocent Persecuted
1879

I handed Bartley the book, and without a word he opened it and quickly ran through the pages. In a few minutes he threw it over to me, saying with a smile, "I know, Pelt, you are wondering why we should spend our time on a simple burglary case; but this may turn out to be a rather curious one. When Rogers told me the story of the Circle Lake affair, I recognized at once that it resembled a very famous case that took place in England in 1879."

He waited to fill and light his pipe before continuing:

"Yes, that's why I am interested in it. It's almost the same in every detail as the story you will find in that pamphlet you hold in your hand. The English case, known in criminal history as 'The Edlingham Burglary,' is famous because two innocent men were in prison for six years for a crime they did not commit. The evidence against them, the manner in which it was discovered, is almost, if not the very same as that in this affair at Circle Lake of which Rogers tells us.



"You Are Getting Wiser Every Day, Pelt."

"The Edlingham case goes down in the history of crime as one of the worst miscarriages of justice of which we know. There is no doubt that the police faked the evidence against the men. They spent six years in prison for a crime they knew nothing about. In that case, too, the two men were found early in the morning in the house of a local vicar. Just as Slyke and his step-daughter found someone in their house, so the vicar and his daughter discovered two men in their living room. Later the men were arrested on the outskirts of the little English village; and, as in the story that Rogers told us, a piece of paper was found in the room at the vicarage that fitted into the torn corner of a newspaper which was discovered some days later in the house of one of the men. Footprints were also found under the window, and a little piece of cloth on a rose bush. This in turn fitted into a torn place in a pair of trousers belonging to one of the men."

I uttered an exclamation of wonder, and Bartley grinned. "It is the most famous case of its kind in the history of English crime. It's odd how the evidence in this Circle Lake robbery parallels it so closely. It looks a little as if someone had read of the English crime, and tried to repeat the evidence in this one."

"And then these men may be innocent?"

"Well," replied Bartley thoughtfully, "maybe. The fact that there have been other attempts to break into Slyke's house points that way. To a student of criminal literature, the finding of an old crime re-staged is rather interesting. That is why I said I would like to look into it.

"Go into the office, will you, Pelt, and see what we have there on Slyke."

Bartley had a large office, lined with tall, green filing cabinets, containing the reports of his cases and his wonderful card-index. This index contained information about almost every important person in the country, information that gave at a glance a keen insight into the character of the man whose name was on the card. It took me but a second to find the card that contained Slyke's name. When I returned to the library, Bartley asked me to read it aloud. It contained the following:

"Slyke, Robert, broker. Born Kittery, Maine. Educated in public school. In business in New Hampshire, 1879 to 1886, buying and trading cattle. Came to New York, 1886, became a broker. Made and lost several fortunes. Said to have been converted by Billy Sunday in 1913; no evidence of it. Rather eccentric, dabbled a bit in spiritualism and has been duped by several mediums. Quick tempered, with few friends. There is a question of his business honesty. Wife died 1914. One son and a step-daughter. Summer home, Circle Lake, N. Y. City home, Garden City. Was worth about $500,000, but rumored to have lost a part of this in recent years."

Bartley listened while I read this short and commonplace history.

When I had finished, he said simply, "I wonder what was in his house that the burglars wanted."

I asked the question that had been in my mind for some time. "Why was he unable to identify the men when his daughter said she could?"

Bartley smiled at my question. "You are getting wiser every day, Pelt. It is curious that Slyke professed to be unable to identify the men when the girl, who was on the steps behind him and even further away from the men than he was, could do so. It may be that he did recognize them and did not want to say who they were. If that is so, then the whole affair is more mysterious than ever."

He rose to his feet and glanced at his watch. "Tomorrow, or Sunday, we will run up to the lake. We had better drive up in my car. It will take only seven hours. I will telegraph to Currie, my old Harvard roommate, that we are coming. He has been after me for several years to come for a visit."

He walked the length of the room, and paused a moment to study attentively a Rops highly colored etching, much as if he had never seen it before. Then he turned back to the desk and said, "You had better read over that pamphlet of the Edlingham case now. The two cases are curiously similar."

As he left the room, he added with a regretful little laugh, "There goes our fishing; it's always the way."

An hour later when he returned I was still curled up in a big chair by the fireplace. I had spent the time reading the story of the old English crime. The two cases were, as Bartley had said, very much alike. I agreed with him that, if we took the ground that someone at Circle Lake had faked the evidence, then whoever he was he had read the report of this other crime and used it as a guide.

CHAPTER II

In Which We Visit Mr. Slyke, but Do Not Receive a Very Warm Reception.

It was not until early Sunday morning that we were able to leave the city. After the days of rain, the ride along the banks of the Hudson was very beautiful. At Albany we had luncheon in one of the large hotels to the accompaniment of an orchestra booming the popular music of the moment. Bartley was so thoroughly uncomfortable that he refused to speak. It was not until we were waiting for the waiter to return with our change and he had lighted a cigar that he became more amiable. He bowed to some people he knew, then leaned toward me and spoke softly so that those at the next table would not hear.

"Pelt, we cannot say just what we will find up at the lake. I have thought the affair over carefully, and the more I think of it the more puzzled I am. If Rogers told us all the facts, then there are two well-defined conclusions to be drawn. The first is that those two men are innocent. The second is that Slyke knew who it was that broke into his house, but had strong reasons for claiming he could not recognize them. If his daughter could swear to the identity of the men that were arrested, he should also have been able to recognize them. But he says he did not, and, we are told, he wanted the case dropped."

He paused as the waiter appeared with our change, and we went back to our car.

Saratoga was only a forty-five mile drive from Albany. Circle Lake was several miles nearer.

I knew very little about the place except that it was a small lake outside of Saratoga where there were a number of large summer estates. Bob Currie, who had roomed with Bartley at Harvard, had a place there where he passed the greater part of the year.

About an hour and a half out of Albany, Bartley said suddenly, pointing to a small sheet of water in the distance, "That's Circle lake."

We were on the top of a large hill at the moment, and, though the lake was several miles away, it looked even smaller than I had expected. It was not more than a mile across, and was a complete circle except where a small bay broke its circumference.

> "I'm sick of the whole thing. Those men had a fair trial and were found guilty. What more do you want?"

FRENCH DRIVE RUHR OPPONENTS

Wholesale Arrests and Deportations Reported—20 Germans are Killed.

STRIKES ON INCREASE

Censorship is Established and Several Papers are Suspended—Communication Cut Between Berlin and Rhineland.

Paris—Twenty Germans are reported to have been killed when French soldiers were obliged to use their arms to protect themselves during a violent nationalist demonstration at Boppard, near Bingen, says the Echo De Paris. The newspaper says it has been impossible to obtain confirmation of the report on account of interruption of communication with the Rhineland.

It is asserted the demonstration originated through the arrest of the burgomaster of Boppard.

The Rhur valley is virtually isolated and communication for the most part is cut off and a censorship has been established. Berlin is out of touch with Essen and other Rhineland points.

The railroad strike is in full swing and the telephone and postal services are badly crippled.

The French authorities are engaged in the systematic arrest and expulsion of German officials, state and municipal, for refusal to obey orders. A number of papers in the occupied territory have been suspended by order of the Rhineland high commission for brief periods for the publication of prejudiced articles.

The British parliamentary labor party wants parliament convoked earlier than February 13, so that the situation arising out of Franco-Belgian occupation of the Rhur may be given full consideration.

Premier Poincare announces that the French troops will remain in the Ruhr until reparations are paid, but no longer.

Fritz Thyssen, who is in Berlin, announces that the "people of the Ruhr form a compact unit in their determination to resist French encroachments, and under no circumstances will they give in."

PEACE PARLEY NEAR CRISIS

France and Italy Seeking to Avoid Abrupt Ending.

Lausanne—Constructive influences are being brought to bear on the various delegations at the Near East peace conference to reduce to a minimum the chances of a rupture of the conference when the allied draft of the proposed treaty of peace is officially submitted to the Turks.

Although the allied front still remains unbroken there are clear indications that France and Italy, at least, will not subscribe to any proceedings having the ring of an ultimatum to the Turks when the draft treaty is handed them.

As for the Turks, they are beginning to show tendencies of despair. The treaty was presented privately to them. It consists of more than 150 typewritten pages, and contains many clauses to which they are absolutely opposed, and many others, inserted at the last minute, which they say they are unable to understand.

The Angora delegates have worked themselves into such a state that they are now distrustful of anything and everything the allies put forward, and they hesitate to make any definite decisions.

A delicate situation at Lausanne and alarming possibilities are liable to follow a brusque rupture of the conferences; this is further emphasized by reports relating to the movement of troops and threatened troop movements.

Turkey and Russia were alleged to have already signed a special accord whereby Russia would hasten to the aid of Turkey in the event of resumption of hostilities, and occupy Mesopotamia, wresting this disputed territory from the British.

RUM SMUGGLED IN QUANTITY

1,200,000 Gallons Annually Into U. S. From Bahamas, Charge.

Washington—Liquor is now being smuggled into the United from the Bahama islands at the rate of 1,200,000 gallons annually, while the government and population of that British colony getting "relatively immense revenues from the traffic" are absolutely indisposed to sympathize with efforts to check it, according to a statement by Representative Rogers, Republican, of Massachusetts, based, he declared, on official data furnished him by the state department.

Williston Wants Big Bridge.

Williston—A great deal of interest is being shown here in the proposition to construct a bridge across the Missouri river at this point. The need of a bridge has been keenly felt, especially by farmers living in the northern part of McKenzie county who have been obliged to depend upon uncertain ferry service or travel far greater distances to the smaller towns to the south. This bridge would be constructed on the route of the Denver-Estevan highway and would thus benefit the entire western part of the state.

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Willmar—A new state bank will be established near Willmar in Roseland township. Application for establishment of the institution has been made to the state securities commission by S. B. Qvale of Willmar and James Mattson of Svea.

Hastings—W. H. Beerse, chairman of the Dakota county board of commissioners appointed the 1923 board of health for Dakota county, as follows: Dr. R. C. Radabaugh, Hastings; J. P. Nolan, South St. Paul, and Andrew Denzer of Riverside station.

Hastings—John Freeberg of South St. Paul, was indicted for murder by the Dakota county grand jury in connection with the killing of Jonas H. Linebech of South St. Paul. Linebech was killed March 30, 1922.

Grand Rapids—The Itasca county fair will be held Sept. 11, 12 and 13, this year, it was decided at a meeting of the directors of the County Fair association. The premium list will be out April 1.

Owatonna — Minneasota dairymen brought the 45th annual convention of the State Dairymen's association to a close after adoption of a program for further progress and an extension of its activities this year.

Thief River Falls—The departments meeting of the Minnesota Co-operative Creameries association of District No. 14 was held in Thief River Falls. About 60 delegates attended. The district is composed of 10 counties, commonly known as the Red River valley.

Pipestone—At the annual sale held at Faramont Hereford farms 23 head of cattle were sold at an average price of $126 per head. The high price paid was $270. Many Hereford breeders were attracted by the sale.

Thief River Falls—The board of organizations of Lutheran Free church will hold a four day mission meeting beginning Feb. 15 at 11 a. m. Rev. O. H. Slethen of Minneapolis, president of the Lutheran Free church, will be at the first meeting.

Red Wing—By a vote of 45 to 13 stockholders in the Red Wing Co-operative creamery decided to change the organization from a co-operative to a stock company.

Duluth—Judgment in the settlement of 44 fire claims totaling $55,415.29 were filed in district court by Judge W. A. Camp. The judgments were for payment on the losses suffered in the forest fires of 1918 and were paid through James E. Davis, chairman of the United States railway administration.

Albert Lea—Arrest and conviction of the persons who killed one of the finest Duroc-Jersey show mothers in the county is being sought by owners of the Lee farm, northwest of this city. The animal, weighing more than seven hundred pounds, has captured grand championship prizes at many southern Minnesota fairs.

Winona—Fire of undetermined origin destroyed the grain elevator of the coal shed of the Western Grain & Coal company in this city, causing a loss estimated by officials at $25,000. Practically the entire loss, which includes the building, 1,000 tons of coal and coke and a quantity of grain, is covered by insurance.

Crookston—The hearing of the contest proceedings brought by ex-Sheriff O. K. Bolstad against Sheriff Anton Nelson has been completed in district court here before Judge Wm. Watts. The case will now have to be argued before the judge at a latter date by the attorneys for the two men. Bolstad is contesting Nelson's election on the grounds that the corrupt practices law was violated.

St. Paul—M. G. Swenson, former vice president of the Fidelity State Bank, 2417 Central avenue, was arrested charged with the alleged embezzlement of $1,400. The defalcations, which extended over a period of two years, according to representatives of the U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty company, were uncovered last October, and resulted in Swenson's discharge. Since that time he has been at liberty upon his promise to make restitution.

Red Wing—Taxpayers of Goodhue county paid out more than $12,000 to operate district court last year, according to figures compiled by County Auditor C. H. Meyer. This is a decided increase over the year previous and was made so partially by an increase of civil cases, many of them being brought here from other states.

St. Cloud—Headquarters stations of the St. Cloud fire department was condemned and ordered razed within 90 days. George H. Nettleton, state fire marshal, declared the building was in condition to collapse at any time, endangering the lives of a score of firemen always on duty there. The building houses most of the city's motor apparatus.

Morris—J. F. Perkins was awarded $23,800 by a jury in district court here, in his personal injury suit against the Great Northern railway for $80,000. Perkins, an employee of the company, fell from a refrigerator car two years ago. His left leg was cut off at the hip.

Frazee—Sander Jascola, an ex-service man, committed suicide by shooting. The man disappeared from his home near Todd Lake and a few days later a search for him was instituted. His body was found by one of the searchers in a strawstack where he had crawled Sticks in Their Mouths.

Lola had moved from the country in Kansas to Indianapolis, and, on her first visit to her aunt's near Lebanon, was much interested in watching all the farm animals and poultry.

She pointed to the chickens and said: "We had chickens in Kansas, Aunt Barbara, but," with a surprised look at the geese, with their long bills, "we didn't have any of them things with sticks in their mouths."—Indianapolis News.

Ingenious Pile Driver.

There has been employed on numerous occasions by members of the Engineer corps a most ingenious pile driver, which acts with great speed. On two sides of the pile one-inch gas pipes are placed in longitudinal grooves. At the lower end the pipes are furnished with nozzles inclined inward toward the point of the pile. A force pump drives water into the pipes, and the water, issuing from the nozzles under a pressure of 70 pounds to the square inch, removes the dirt so rapidly beneath the pile that it sinks three times as fast as if hammered by a pile driver.—Washington Star.

The Proud Rat Catcher.

The witty Oliver Herford was talking about snobbishness.

"I know a city missionary," he said, "who invited a famous bishop to dine at his slum residence to meet two local characters, a garbage collector and a rat catcher.

"The bishop accepted the invitation gladly, and the garbage collector said that he, too, would be delighted, but the rat catcher spoiled the party. He must refuse, he said, to sit down with a garbage collector."

Me an' her mother both spoke right up in unison together and said 'No,' in a loud, firm tone. We decided we'd stand right by each other on that and nothin' could shake us. She kep' astin' day after day, beggin' an' pleadin' an' bawlin' around, but no, sir! When me an' Mandy makes up our minds nothin' can change us. That girl pestered us fer weeks about gittin' that hair bobbed, us a-refusin' reg'lar an' steady. An' even when she got it bobbed she wa'n't so almighty pleased with it at that!"—Farm Life.

Words of Wisdom.

Robert, age six, and his auntie were sitting on the veranda, when Robert's Sunday school teacher passed and spoke to Robert in a sweet, musical voice.

Turning to his aunt with a rather wistful look, he said, "I don't think anyone will ever marry Miss Blank because she hasn't a pretty face."

Auntie kept on reading aloud, but was interrupted presently by a happy little voice exclaiming, "Oh, auntie, I believe someone will wish to marry her after all, because I believe she has a pretty soul."

Large Families and Genius.

Havelock Ellis, the English sociologist, took from dictionaries of biography 1,030 British geniuses from the Fourth century to the present time, rejecting any about whose parentage nothing was known. He found the vast majority came from very large families, "much larger than the average family at the time they lived." The geniuses tended to be the oldest sons of large families or the youngest sons of large families. Only children made up a very small percentage of the thousand and thirty.—McClure's Magazine.

WILL BE

DE LAVAL SERVICE DAY

For the benefit of our many customers and users of De Laval Cream Separators we have established a De Laval Service Day.

On this day we shall be glad to have any De Laval user bring his complete separator to our store for a thorough and careful inspection and adjustment, which will be made free of charge. Should any parts, due to unusual wear or accident, need to be replaced, this will be done, the only charge being for the price of the new parts used. No charge will be made for the service.

A De Laval representative will be with us to assist with this work. Bring in your De Laval Separator that day and receive the benefit of his advice on the care and operation of the machine, as well as the free service. It is our wish, and that of the De Laval Company, that every user of a De Laval Separator get the maximum of service at the minimum of cost, and we therefore urge you to avail yourself of this free and useful service.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Lewis Anderson and Lena Anderson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Trust Company, trustee under the last Will and Testament of Patrick F. Lyons, deceased, mortgagees, dated August 20, 1917, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, September 18, 1917, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on Page 231, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of Five thousand dollars ($5000) principal and Three hundred dollars ($300) represented by an interest coupon by said mortgage secured which became due September 1, 1922. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable the sums of Five thousand dollars principal and Three hundred dollars interest coupon with interest upon both amounts at six per cent per annum since September 1, 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice of Five thousand four hundred nineteen and and 25-100 dollars ($5419.25), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Southwest quarter (SW1-4), and the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-eight (158), North of Range Forty-five (45) excepting therefrom two acres described as follows:

Beginning at the Northeast corner of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of said Section twenty-one, in said Township and Range, running west five chains, thence south four chains, thence east five chains, thence north four chains to the starting point. All of the above being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Marshall County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Warren in said County and State on the 13th day of March, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $5,419.25 and interest from date of this notice and taxes, if any, and an attorneys fee of One hundred dollars ($100) as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed and delivered by Oliver Martin, a single man, Mortgagor to Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1920, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of March 1920, at 9:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 93 of Mortgages on Page 615, and

Whereas, the said Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee and holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and whereas there is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $1777.80, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is Hereby Given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southeast Quarter (SE1-4), East Half (E1-) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) and Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-three (33) in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty-four (44) West, except that piece or parcel or strip of land 100 feet wide, being 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste Marie Railway track as the same is now located across the S1-2SW1-4 of Section 33, 157-44, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 24th day of February 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $1777.80, and interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

We know of another editor less than a thousand miles from here that would do the same thing if a chance was given him.

Farmers Meeting a Success

A large number of farmers attended the dairy meeting Monday afternoon and judging by the number of questions asked, they were deeply interested and we hope gained much valuable information.

Some of the facts brot forth emphasized the need of silos, that a cow cannot eat enough of the ordinary hay to produce milk, but needs ensilage, alfalfa, clover, cottonseed or oil meal. That shorts and middlings are poor cow feed but bran is alright. That it pay to feed potatoes at present low prices and sugar beets also are good for the dairy cows.

The pictures gave many dairy facts and figures, but were mainly advertisements of the Jersy breed of cattle and didn't give much credit to the other dairy breeds, which to our way of thinking is somewhat out of place for a man advertised as being sent out by University Farms.

After the dairy meeting the depositors of the old bank held a short business meeting at which the need was brot out for every depositor to join and help along with the work that has been slowly dragging for the want of an organized and energetic effort.

Walter H. Anderson was at the meeting and left the same evening for St. Paul to consult with the state banking department in behalf of the [illegible]

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Lewis Anderson and Lena Anderson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Trust Company, trustee under the last Will and Testament of Patrick F. Lyons, deceased, mortgagees, dated August 20, 1917, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, September 13, 1917, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on Page 231, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of Five thousand dollars ($5000) principal and Three hundred dollars ($300) represented by an interest coupon by said mortgage secured which became due September 1, 1922. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable the sums of Five thousand dollars principal and Three hundred dollars interest coupon with interest upon both amounts at six per cent per annum since September 1, 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice of Five thousand four hundred nineteen and and 25-100 dollars ($5419.25), and no action or proceeding, at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

WILL BE
DE LAVAL SERVICE DAY

For the benefit of our many customers and users of De Laval Cream Separators we have established a De Laval Service Day.

On this day we shall be glad to have any De Laval user bring his complete separator to our store for a thorough and careful inspection and adjustment, which will be made free of charge. Should any parts, due to unusual wear or accident, need to be replaced, this will be done, the only charge being for the price of the new parts used. No charge will be made for the service.

A De Laval representative will be with us to assist with this work. Bring in your De Laval Separator that day and receive the benefit of his advice on the care and operation of the machine, as well as the free service. It is our wish, and that of the De Laval Company, that every user of a De Laval Separator get the maximum of service at the minimum of cost, and we therefore urge you to avail yourself of this free and useful service.

Farmers Meeting a Success

A large number of farmers attended the dairy meeting Monday afternoon and judging by the number of questions asked, they were deeply interested and we hope gained much valuable information.

Some of the facts brot forth emphasized the need of silos, that a cow cannot eat enough of the ordinary hay to produce milk, but needs ensilage, alfalfa, clover, cottonseed or oil meal. That shorts and middlings are poor cow feed but bran is alright. That it pay to feed potatoes at present low prices and sugar beets also are good for the dairy cows.

The pictures gave many dairy facts and figures, but were mainly advertisements of the Jersy breed of cattle and did'nt give much credit to the other dairy breeds, which to our way of thinking is somewhat out of place for a man advertised as being sent out by University Farms.

After the dairy meeting the depositors of the old bank held a short business meeting at which the need was brot out for every depositor to join and help along with the work that has been slowly dragging for the want of an organized and energetic effort.

Walter H. Anderson was at the meeting and left the same evening for St. Paul to consult with the state banking department in behalf of the [illegible].

Take Notice

AT AGE 71, FINDS HOUSEWORK EASY

Mrs. Jennings Says Tanlac Restored Strength After "Flu" Attack and Ended Stomach Trouble.

"I was almost an invalid and Tanlac built me up to a strong, well woman. I consider it my best friend," is the grateful and characteristic statement of Mrs. Emma Jennings, residing at Clearwater, Cal.

"An attack of the grippe left me completely broken down. My stomach felt sick, my legs and arms so tired and weak I could hardly use them, and I scarcely had energy and strength to dress myself. I just kept getting weaker in spite of all I could do and, as I am seventy-one, I had begun to think my age was against me ever getting well.

"Almost from the day I began taking Tanlac I commenced to feel stronger. So I kept picking up with every bottle until now I can easily do all my housework, for I am feeling fine. I wouldn't be without Tanlac in the house. It is just grand."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

Overcomes Illegibility.

Acting on requests to decipher illegible documents and papers, particularly those that have passed through fire without being burned to ashes, the bureau of standards has worked out a method that is very effective and comparatively simple. It is based on the principle that a photographic plate or film, besides being sensitive to light, is also sensitive to certain gases or vapors. The specimen under investigation is placed between two photographic plates and kept in intimate contact with the sensitized coating in the dark, for a period of two weeks in the case of fast plates. On development in the usual manner, a perfect copy of the writing and printing is obtained.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

COULD HARDLY DO HER WORK

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Eat, Sleep and Feel Better Every Way

Chicago, Ill.—"I was weak and rundown and in such a nervous condition that I could hardly do my work. I was tired all the time, and dizzy, and could not sleep and had no appetite. I tried different medicines for years, but they did not help me. Then I read in the papers about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for other women and gave it a trial. I began to eat better and could sleep, and consider it a wonderful medicine. I recommend it to my friends and will never be without it."—Mrs. M. Ohlen, 8640 S. Marshfield Ave., Chicago, Illinois.

It is such letters as these that testify to the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. This woman speaks from the fullness of her heart. She describes as correctly as she can her condition, first the symptoms that bothered her the most, and later the disappearance of those symptoms. It is a sincere expression of gratitude.

For nearly fifty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been so praised by women.

ROBERT SLYKE

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga. Bartley is asked, in view of recent developments, to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Rogers, chief of the central office, arrives as Bartley and his friend Pelt, a newspaper man, are preparing to go on a fishing trip, and begins to describe the case. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery.

At the foot of the hill, the road ran beside the lake for a little way, then ascended another hill. Just before this ascent began, Bartley left the main road and followed one that ran for nearly a mile between leafy trees. At length he turned his car down a long driveway that wound its crooked way in and out through a grove of great trees. When I had begun to wonder if we should ever escape from them, we came out upon a green lawn that stretched for several acres, having in its midst a large rambling house, painted the whitest white I have ever seen. It was a cheery-looking house, one made to live in, with a great piazza stretching across the front, and gay-covered chairs that gave to it a tropical atmosphere. Even as I was thinking how much I liked it, a man came running down the steps, three at a time, whooping like a wild Indian and waving his arms at us.

Truth compels me to say that Currie was, to put it mildly, stout, nor could anyone call him good looking. His big red face, now almost purple from exercise, was a kindly, tolerant one, filled with humor; his blue eyes warm with kindness. Down the steps he came and across the lawn, yelling all the time:

"John Bartley, you old sleuth, don't you dare drive on my new lawn!"

With a laugh, Bartley made a wide circle across the grass before he stopped. Currie was beside us and on the step of the car in a second, one arm thrown around Bartley's shoulder and his red face beaming; but all he said was, "Well, well, John!"

Bartley's answer was just as short and had the same deep friendliness. Then Currie turned and greeted me. A second later, a servant came to take charge of our things, and we followed Currie to the house.

We entered by one of the largest living rooms that I have ever seen. It stretched almost the entire length of the building and had two fireplaces, both of which were large enough for a man to stand upright in. Currie led us up a flight of stairs to the second story where, pushing open a door, he showed us into our suite of rooms.

Five minutes later, at Currie's suggestion, the three of us were sitting on the stone edge of his swimming pool. It was forty feet long and open to sun and air. For thirty minutes we swam and dived. Then we climbed out and dried ourselves in the warm sun.

Then Bartley lighted a cigarette and told his friend what had brought us to Circle Lake.

Currie said nothing until he had finished, and then, rubbing his chin slowly with his hand, replied, "Do you know, John, there are a good many people around here that doubt if those two men had anything to do with the robbery. There was nothing stolen, so Slyke said. He said also that there was nothing in the house that anyone would want to steal. After the trial folks began to talk, and since those other attempts to break into his place—well, they have talked more!"

"What are they saying?" asked Bartley.

"I don't know such a devil of a lot about it myself," replied Currie, "I was away at the time of the burglary and of the trial. But I do know that some people doubt if there ever was a burglary. Others say the state police and the local cops got mixed up in a row and framed the men. Still others think Slyke knew who the men were, but had strong reasons for not wanting to identify them. What his reasons could be, God alone knows! Never cottoned much to Slyke anyway. He is a crabbed sort of chap, a bit conceited, one who is always right and the rest of us, of course, always wrong. But if you want to see him, and are not too tired, we can go over there now. I have to see him myself about a strip of land I just bought from him. His estate joins mine, you know."

Bartley expressed himself as far from tired and very willing to go to see Slyke at once. We dressed quickly and soon joined Currie in the living room. As we went out onto the lawn, he said:

"I am sorry my wife is away, but she will be back tomorrow. I asked Doctor King to come over tonight and dine with us. He can probably tell you more about the robbery than I can, for he was called in by Slyke the night it happened."

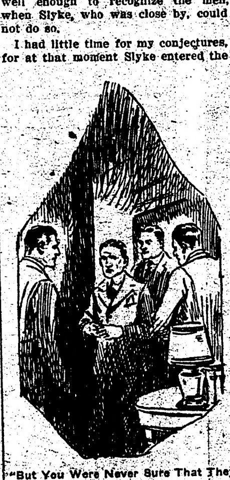
After a ten minutes' walk we came suddenly upon a house, a massive stone building, half covered with ivy. A large veranda ran across the front, forming at one end a glass-enclosed sun parlor. What appealed to me most was the huge stone tower that rose from the center of the building to a height of some thirty feet. The house, with its well-kept lawn, stretching to the woods in the distance, made a beautiful picture.

Though we had not paused long to admire the scene, we did not have time to ascend the steps and ring the bell before the butler opened the door. Currie gave his name and we were ushered into a great room which, from its furnishings, might have been called a library if there had been any books in it.

When the butler had left us, Bartley said to Currie, "I presume that this is the room where they found the burglars?"

Currie nodded, and I turned to look about. It had two large windows opening on the side of the house where there was no veranda, and nearby a small safe, half hidden in the wall. This, I judged, must have been what the burglars were seeking. I tried to picture to myself what had taken place on the night of the burglary. There could not have been much light; and I wondered how Slyke's step-daughter, standing on the stairs at the far end of the room, could have seen well enough to recognize the men, when Slyke, who was close by, could not do so.

I had little time for my conjectures, for at that moment Slyke entered the room. After greeting Currie, he was introduced to us.



"But You Were Never Sure That They Were Guilty."

While Currie was talking with him about the strip of land that he had bought, I examined him closely.

He was a small, decidedly nervous man, weighing about a hundred and thirty pounds, with low forehead, shifty eyes, and flabby lips that drooped. His face twitched again and again and his hands were never still.

It was not until Currie had told him who Bartley was, that he showed the slightest sign of interest in either of us, and even then his manner was far from cordial. You could see, in fact, that he was wondering why Bartley had come, and wishing him a thousand miles away.

Bartley himself, seeing how Slyke felt, said with a friendly laugh, "It's hardly right to run in on you this way, Mr. Slyke. I was coming over to see you formally in the morning; but as Mr. Currie said he had some business with you this afternoon, I decided to come with him."

He then told Slyke why we had come to Circle Lake. The man made no response to this, nor did he say anything when Bartley told him of the governor's interest in the two men now in prison for the burglary.

When Bartley had finished, he actually snarled; "I am sick of the whole thing. Those men had a fair trial and were found guilty. What more do you want?"

Bartley, whose eyes had never left his face, though Slyke refused to meet them, shot out suddenly, "But you were never sure that they were guilty."

The remark was so unexpected that Slyke's face grew red and he stammered, "But—well—anyway they were—proven guilty."

"But you yourself said that you could not identify them."

"That may be so, but there were others that did recognize them, even though I could not," Slyke answered.

Bartley changed his tactics. When he sets out to win a person, there are few that can resist him; and in a moment or two even Slyke thawed under his smile.

"I can understand," Bartley remarked, "how bored you must be with the whole affair, but, as you probably know, Mr. Slyke, there is a growing feeling that those men in prison are innocent. What I am to do is to find out whether there is any ground for such a feeling. I know that you will be the very first person to wish them pardoned if they are innocent. Can I come over tomorrow morning and have a talk with you about the burglary? My wide experience may help me to see things that the others have overlooked. The governor asked me to look into the matter, you know."

Slyke did not seem over-pleased at this suggestion, and muttered that he was going fishing in the morning. He finally agreed that his step-daughter Ruth could give Bartley whatever information he wanted. Seeing that so far as he was concerned, the conversation was over we took our leave.

As we re-entered the woods, Bartley remarked with a laugh, "He was not what you might call keen to see us. That burglary for some reason seems to be a sore subject with him."

When we arrived at the house, Currie excused himself to see about some matters on the estate, and we went up to our rooms.

Currie had said that if we came down to dinner in evening dress he would throw us out; so still in white flannels, we joined him in the dining room. He was talking with a young man of about thirty-five, whom he introduced as Doctor King. He was a likable sort of chap, with clean-shaven face, tanned red by outdoor life, and dark blue eyes with a twinkle in them. Upon his coat was the little insignia that showed he had seen service.

Currie had promised us a good dinner, and we were not disappointed. The doctor showed himself to be as well read as Bartley, who is interested in anything that is a book. As the dinner progressed, we found that the doctor and Bartley found many a congenial topic.

Their discussion finally settled down upon the two schools of psycho-analysis. From the first, this talk bored Currie; and every once in a while he would throw me an appealing glance. At last the conversation turned to crime, and Currie suddenly asked Bartley if it had ever been discovered who Jack the Ripper was. What made him ask the question I do not know. Bartley replied that though no name had ever been given out, Scotland Yard had come to the conclusion that the crimes had been committed either by a crazy Polish Jew, or more probably by a doctor. A well-known doctor had been on the border line of insanity at the time the Whitechapel murders had occurred; and when he dropped out of sight the murders ceased. The English detectives were almost positive that he was the murderer, but they could not prove it.

"No more than they were able to prove," Currie interrupted, "that those men they sent to jail ever broke into Slyke's house."

The doctor remarked, "I was called in as the family physician by Slyke, on the night of the burglary. He told me, at the time, that he had not recognized either of the men."

Bartley did not speak, but sat watching the glowing tip of his cigarette. I knew he was waiting for the doctor to say more.

"Both the men that were arrested," the doctor continued, "had worked at one time or another for Slyke. You would have thought that, if they had been the ones who broke into his house, he would have recognized them. But he told me positively that night, or rather that morning, that he had not recognized either of them."

As the doctor did not continue, Bartley asked, "Then he never, at any time, said he recognized either of the men?"

The doctor shook his head. "No, he never did. At the trial he said there had not been enough light for him to see their faces. Ruth, the step-daughter, was the only one who thought she recognized them—that is, one of them."

Bartley asked quietly, "What was the mix-up between the state police and the local police?"

King looked surprised. "Why, I never knew there was any. Of course, there is some foolish jealousy between the two branches. The state police arrested those men simply because they were sneaking through the fields at three o'clock in the morning and refused to give an account of themselves. I have heard that the officer in command of the troopers never believed that these men had anything to do with the Slyke affair. Most of the evidence against them was not found until several days later—some by the local police and some by Slyke's chauffeur. When the police were first called in, they didn't find any evidence; indeed, I do not think they looked for any until the next morning."

Why Farmers are Turning to

CHEVROLET for Economical Transportation

In 1922 Chevrolet jumped from seventh to second place in sales of all cars, and to first place in sales of fully equipped modern cars.

Purchases by farmers were the chief factor in this remarkable development.

Farmers want automobiles not only of low first price, but also of low later cost for operation and maintenance.

They want room, comfort, and the ability to stand up under hard conditions.

They find that Chevrolet, fully equipped as sold, is the best value per dollar in the low-priced field, and neighbors tell them it costs less per mile to operate.

WILL NOT STAND MINGLING

Some Danger in Combination of Potash Tablets and Potassium Chlorate.

At a merry party in England, one of the guests suddenly found himself emitting a shower of sparks. The place of origin was his coat pocket. Everybody laughed, and thought it was a well-contrived joke. But it was not. That was proved by a burned jacket, chair, carpet, and hand. Investigation showed that the guest had in his pocket a packet of potash tablets. Also he had there a box of safety matches.

Now a safety match is coated with potassium chlorate, and it strikes when it is rubbed against phosphorus painted on the box surface. But potash tablets are made of potassium chlorate, and so they, too, are likely to strike on a safety matchbox. This is what they had done. Some of them had escaped from their packet and were loose in the jacket pocket, ready to make a fireworks display if they rubbed against the matchbox. If you carry a safety matchbox, be careful what else you carry in the same pocket. Mind it is not potash tablets for a sore throat, or you may "go off" unawares in a private fireworks display.

Hotplate Has Lasted Long.

A man in Washington state is said to own the oldest electric hotplate in existence. He has had it 20 years, during which time he estimates it has been used 10,000 hours and has consumed $165 of electrical energy.

Decidedly Not.

ALL THAT INTERESTED HIM

Darky's Desire for Telephonic Connection With San Francisco Had Become Secondary Matter.

An old negro hurried into a drug store telephone booth and asked for long-distance connection, giving the address of a person in San Francisco. After a long wait the operator told him that the San Francisco exchange was on the wire.

"Now," she said, "deposit $7.65 and I will give you the connection."

The old negro appeared not to have understood.

"What did yo' say, Miss?" he asked.

"I said you must deposit $7.65. Put the money in the slots on the telephone."

"Ma-nam?"

"I told you to deposit $7.65." She raised her voice.

"Say, Miss," came the quivering tones of the darky, "how much do it cost t' hang up dis thing?"—From Judge.

Twin Suns.

The star Alpha Centauri, one of the nearest to the earth, consists, as the telescope shows, of two suns, one of which is five or six times brighter than the other. But observations by Roberts at the Cape of Good Hope observatory led to the conclusion that the two components of Alpha Centauri, much as they differ in brightness, are really twice as heavy as our sun. It seems to follow from these facts that one of these twin suns is losing its light and in the course of ages may become only a gigantic opaque planet, while its companion will continue to blaze with solar splendor.—Washington Star.

Why Bake At Home

when you can buy bread like it, ready baked?

COUNT the raisins—at least eight big, plump, tender fruit-meats to the slice.

Taste it—see how the raisin flavor permeates the bread.

No need to bake at home when we've arranged with bakers in almost every town and city to bake this full-fruited raisin bread.

Just 'phone and they'll deliver it—all ready to surprise the family tonight.

It comes from master bakers' modern ovens in your city. And it's made with Sun-Maid Raisins.

That's another reason for its superiority. A rare combination of nutritious cereal and fruit—both good and good for you, so you should serve it at least twice a week.

Use Sun-Maid Raisins also in puddings, cakes and cookies. You may be offered other brands that you know less well than Sun-Maids, but the kind you want is the kind you know is good. Insist, therefore, on Sun-Maid brand. They cost no more than ordinary raisins.

Concern for Santa.

Little Letha is about the smallest patron of the West Indianapolis library, and was being taught a piece to speak for her Sunday school Christmas entertainment.

"I come to say, good night, sleep tight—"

"For Santa will be speeding," prompted her mother.

"Santa will be what, mother?" exclaimed the little girl.

"Oh, mother, Shank will get him, and he'll get arrested," she said in frightened earnestness.—Indianapolis News.

Disagrees With Experts.

After extensive research over a period of years, and the testing of tens of thousands of adults and children, psychological "experts" announce that we do not progress mentally after the age of fifteen. "There is little mental growth after the age of fifteen," is the flat statement of the findings of these specialists.

"Do you know," said the earnest person, "that there are men renowned in literature, art and science whose annual incomes are not large enough to give them the ordinary comforts of life?"

"I don't doubt it," said Mr. Gawker; "but if nature gave them sound bodies to start with and they've enjoyed reasonably good health, it seems to me that it's their own fault if they haven't gone in for athletics and acquired proficiency with a pair of eight-ounce gloves."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

VELVET LEADS WINTER STYLES

Dark Rich Colors Fashioned Into Street Costumes—Bright Shades for Evening Wear.

Wherever one turns one finds velvet put to most attractive uses. In dark rich colors it is fashioned into street costumes. In brilliant shades it is chosen for evening gowns and wraps. In every possible tone it stands out as the favorite fabric for millinery. Recently the new midwinter fashions in hats made their appearance, and in these there is a strong tendency to use more vivid colorings, especially in the small hats, which one wears with fur or fur-trimmed coats. Several exceedingly smart new models are of panne velvet made on the lines of the always becoming tam and covered with chain-stitch embroidery done in silver and gold thread. The effect is charming.

Velveteen is once more upon fashion's horizon, and is used for skirts which are designed for wear with the new short coats of fur. It is an attractive mode, and one which will probably be a successful one.

Another way of using velveteen is for a short box coat worn with a skirt in checked wool laid in fine knife plaits. A very attractive costume of this type consists of a coat of brown velveteen and a skirt of brown and tan wool.

Bright Slippers Smart.

Slippers for the winter dance may be of plain silver cloth or of brocaded tissue in a riot of lovely colors. The latter kind is very smart and can be worn with different frocks. Plain black satin is best with the black velvet gown. If it's without a strap it may have a colonial buckle of brilliants. If it has a strap, it may fasten with an alluring little disk of brilliants.

Jersey Wool Blouse.

A blouse of green jersey is embroidered in gray wool and worn with a skirt of heavy gray material.

WILL BE

DE LAVAL SERVICE DAY

For the benefit of our many customers and users of De Laval Cream Separators we have established a De Laval Service Day.

On this day we shall be glad to have any De Laval user bring his complete separator to our store for a thorough and careful inspection and adjustment, which will be made free of charge. Should any parts, due to unusual wear or accident, need to be replaced, this will be done, the only charge being for the price of the new parts used. No charge will be made for the service.

A De Laval representative will be with us to assist with this work. Bring in your De Laval Separator that day and receive the benefit of his advice on the care and operation of the machine, as well as the free service. It is our wish, and that of the De Laval Company, that every user of a De Laval Separator get the maximum of service at the minimum of cost, and we therefore urge you to avail yourself of this free and useful service.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Lewis Anderson and Lena Anderson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Trust Company, trustee under the last Will and Testament of Patrick F. Lyons, deceased, mortgagees, dated August 20, 1917, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, September 13, 1917, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on Page 281, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of Five thousand dollars ($5000) principal and Three hundred dollars ($300) represented by an interest coupon by said mortgage secured which became due September 1, 1922. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable the sums of Five thousand dollars principal and Three hundred dollars interest coupon with interest upon both amounts at six per cent per annum since September 1, 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice of Five thousand four hundred nineteen and and 25-100 dollars ($5419.25), and no action pr proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Southwest quarter (SW1-4), and the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-eight (158), North of Range Forty-five (45) excepting therefrom two acres dessribed as follows:

Beginning at the Northeast corner of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of said Section twenty-one in said Township and Range, running west five chains, thence south four chains, thence east five chains, thence north four chains to the starting point. All of the above being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Marshall County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Warren in said County and State on the 13th day of March, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $5,419.25 and interest from date of this notice and taxes, if any, and an attorneys fee of One hundred dollars ($100) as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Northwest Snowbound

Telegraphic dispatches Tuesday forenoon stated that one of the worst storms of the season was coming and we would have no trains that day, as the north bound train would be stopped at Thief River Falls and the south bound would not be allowed to start out from Warroad. The former train only got as far Red Lake Falls, where they had to stay until yesterday, while the snow plow cleaned out the "cuts". We understand this train is expected to reach Holt sometime to-day.

The bus drivers had a hard time to make the school routes Tuesday afternoon, and did not go out Wednesday. Thursday morning the regular schedule was resumed.

According to reports Tuesdays storm was quite general and snow is drifted every where it had a chance.

We have several more names for Farm, Stock & Home and expect to send in the list about the first of next month. There is still plenty of room left for those who would like to get this splendid farm paper.

A senator has introduced a resolution to abolish the opening prayer in the senate. While there is little likelihood of such a resolution, getting the slighest of recognition, yet the attitude of such a man must reflect unfavorably upon those who elected him to the office. Legislation that cannot be performed following an earnest prayer, had best be left undone, for it hints at an unclean or guilty conscience, akin to the court witness who would like to evade the oath of the judge because he wants to lie to the jury. Regardless of sect or creed, the offering of prayer is as old as time itself; it is the basis of civilization and the foundation of success and happiness.

We would feel unsafe indeed living in a community where prayer was abolished. Much more would we mistrust anyone who would remove prayer from the seat of state or national government.—Bronson Budget.

"THIS IS MURDER"

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga. Bartley is asked, in view of recent developments, to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Rogers, chief of the central office, arrives as Bartley and his friend Pelt, a newspaper man, are preparing to go on a fishing trip, and begins to describe the case. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. Bartley and Pelt go to Circle Lake and call on Slyke.

Currie rose and suggested we play a game of billiards; and the conversation about the burglary ended. While I play at the game, Bartley plays with uncanny skill, and both Currie and the doctor were almost equally good players. It was not until some hours later, when the doctor was called away by telephone, that we realized how late it was.

Bartley and I were tired after our ride and the long hours of visiting, and we went immediately to our rooms. Neither was inclined to talk, but Bartley did unburden himself enough to say he believed that Slyke knew who had committed the burglary, but for some reason wanted to hide the fact. Five minutes later, I was in bed and asleep.

I slept without dreaming, until someone aroused me by a vigorous shake. Bending over me, already dressed, was Bartley. I vaguely noticed a strange look in his eyes and traces of excitement on his face, but I was too tired to be interested and started to turn over and go to sleep again. He threw the covers off me, saying in an eager voice:

"Get up, Pelt, get up quick! Doctor King has just 'phoned us to meet him at Slyke's house. They found Slyke in his bed—" he paused "—dead."

"Dead?" I questioned. "But why—how—"

Bartley did not wait for me to finish. "Shot. They told King it was suicide."

CHAPTER III

Suicide or Murder.

I was out of bed in a moment, and getting into my clothes as rapidly as I could. Fully dressed, I followed Bartley out onto the lawn, which was still wet with the morning dew. We crossed the field and went through the woods in silence. At last I ventured to ask what it was that he had heard regarding Slyke's death.

"About five minutes before I woke you, King 'phoned to say that he had been called to Slyke's house—that he was dead. He was told that he had committed suicide."

"Why should be have killed himself?" I asked. "He did not look to me like a man who had nerve enough for that."

In a moody tone Bartley replied, "I don't think he did," and left me to puzzle out his meaning.

When we reached the house there was no outward evidence that anything unusual had taken place. Doctor King's car was coming up the drive as we neared the front of the house. With him was a short, red-faced Irishman in police uniform, whom he introduced, a moment later, as Roche, the chief of the local police force.

Bartley turned to the doctor. "Just what did they tell you over the 'phone?" he asked.

"Only what I told you. I had just gotten out of bed, when the bell rang and an excited voice asked me to come at once, as they had just found Slyke dead and thought he had killed himself."

Before we could ring, in fact before we could reach the top step of the piazza, the door was flung open and a woman of about fifty rushed wildly to the doctor's side. She was far from an attractive woman, thin, with what is called a hatchet face. Her shrill voice broke as she grabbed the doctor's arm and cried:

"It's come, doctor, it's come, just as I expected. He's killed himself. Oh, I knew there would be trouble. Night after night I have had a message on the ouija board. It said again and again, 'Trouble, trouble coming.' And I have dreamed that he was dead, too. It's come. He is dead."

Bartley gave me a look. This, he knew, was Miss Potter, the sister of Slyke's dead wife and an ardent spiritualist.

It was some time before the doctor could get her calmed down enough to introduce us.

By the time the introductions had been completed, we were all in the big room in which we had met Slyke the day before. Currie had told us the previous evening that Slyke was to have a card party that night, and the room showed that there had been one. In the center were three card tables, with the chairs pushed back from them, evidently left as they were when the party broke up.

After a quick glance around, Bartley turned to Miss Potter. "Suppose you tell us how Mr. Slyke was discovered."

She gave a start, wrung her hands, and answered excitedly, "The butler found him. Mr. Slyke was going fishing today, and was to have been called early. The butler went to knock on his door and found it half opened and—"

Bartley interrupted, "Then, I take it, he usually kept the door of his room locked."

"He did. I do not know why. The butler saw it was open, looked in, called him, and got no answer. Then he came and told me. I was at breakfast. I went to his room, and there he was—" and her voice trailed off in horror.

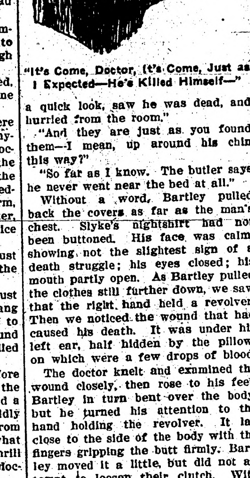
Bartley's face was very grave as he said, "What did you do when you found he was dead?"

For the hundredth time she brushed the hair from her eyes. "I called the servants—Ruth was not here. Then I telephoned for the doctor."

Roche did not like Bartley's doing all the questioning, and he asserted his official position by saying that it was time we went up to the room where Slyke lay. Miss Potter led the way, walking like one weary and overwhelmed with grief. The room, thirty feet square, was larger than I had expected to find. It was furnished like a den. The bed in one corner was the only evidence that it was used for sleeping purposes. Under the white coverlet we could see the still form of a man huddled in a heap, lying on his back, his legs extending into the air a little beyond the foot of the bed. His face was half hidden by the bedclothes, which were closely drawn around his neck and over his chin. The doctor had taken his position at Slyke's head, and we all stood about him in silence until Bartley's voice broke the stillness.

"Miss Potter, when you came in did you touch the bedclothes at all?"

She hesitated a second, as if trying to think, then replied, "No, I gave a quick look, saw he was dead, and hurried from the room."



"It's Come, Doctor, It's Come, Just as I Expected—He's Killed Himself—"

"And they are just as you found them—I mean, up around his chin this way?"

"So far as I know. The butler says he never went near the bed at all."

Without a word, Bartley pulled back the covers as far as the man's chest. Slyke's nightshirt had not been buttoned. His face was calm, showing not the slightest sign of a death struggle; his eyes closed; his mouth partly open. As Bartley pulled the clothes still further down, we saw that the right hand held a revolver. Then we noticed the wound that had caused his death. It was under his left ear, half hidden by the pillow, on which were a few drops of blood.

The doctor knelt and examined the wound closely, then rose to his feet. Bartley in turn bent over the body, but he turned his attention to the hand holding the revolver. It lay close to the side of the body with the fingers gripping the butt firmly. Bartley moved it a little, but did not attempt to loosen their clutch. With another glance at the pillow and the face upon it, he rose, his lips compressed, his face grave.

Roche turned to us with a half smile. "It's such a simple case, Mr. Bartley, that it won't need any of your skill to solve it. The doctor won't need to hold a long inquest. It's as clear a case of suicide as I have ever seen. He undressed, got in bed, and then shot himself. There is the gun in his hand. Not much in this case, is there?"

The doctor half nodded in agreement; but Bartley, as if he had not heard, bent again over the bed, his face stern, and examined the revolver. When he straightened up, he said simply. "It's serious enough, Chief. Murder always is, and this is murder."

At his words Miss Potter, who had been standing beside me, eagerly watching everything that was done, gave a little cry. As for myself, I was not greatly surprised at his words. His manner had been so serious that I had been expecting something of the sort. Roche grunted in amusement, and turned to King.

"Do you hear the man now! Murder! Why, that's foolish, Mr. Bartley. It's suicide. He has the gun in his hand."

Bartley gave him an amused glance as he answered, "It may be foolish, but it's murder. True, he has the gun in his hand; and that makes it look something like suicide, I agree; but that's just what someone wanted us to think."

This statement seemed to make Roche angry. His face flushed and he sneered, "Oh, come now, how do you expect to prove that?"

Bartley did not answer but simply pointed to the gun. I think we all looked at it rather foolishly, as if we expected to find in it, by some miracle, a clue to his statement.

As we did not speak, he replied, "Roche, you think that the fact he is found dead with the gun in his hand, proves that he committed suicide. But to me, that gun and the way it is held, proves murder. Not only murder, but that the gun was placed in his hand after death. Look at the way the hand grasps the revolver. It is not held so firmly but that with some effort it can be removed. The testimony of all medico-legalists is that in cases of suicide or of accidents, the attitudes and acts of the person whose life is suddenly ended are continued for some seconds after death."

Roche was listening attentively, but Bartley's last words were a little over his head. Perceiving that he did not understand, Bartley explained at greater length:

"What I mean by that is simply this: In cases of suicide or where a man shoots himself by accident and dies suddenly, the hand clutches the weapon so tightly that after death it is almost impossible to loosen his grip. There is a muscular spasm that follows death which causes the hand to grip the weapon even more tightly than in life. Most medico-legal books agree that a weapon so held is the best evidence of suicide."

Roche was not willing to accept this statement. "That's a fine theory," he sneered. "Just the sort of a thing you city detectives dig up. You have got to have more than that to make me think he was murdered."

Bartley gave a little shrug of his shoulders, as if bored by the whole thing. "As you wish! I had an idea you might want more evidence than that." He paused, and we waited breathlessly for his next words.

"Look at his eyes. They are tightly closed. It is a recognized fact by all medical men that, when death comes by violence, the eyes of the victim are wide open and staring. On the other hand, in cases where death comes slowly, they may be half shut. In neither instance are they ever fully closed. When we find a case where the eyes are tightly closed, we know that someone has closed them, and that it was done after the man was dead.

"Here we find the eyes closed. If he committed suicide, they would be open. If he had been murdered, they would be open also. Though the fact they are closed does not help us to decide between murder and suicide, it does point to the fact that someone has been in the room and closed them after he died. May we not suppose that the same person that placed the gun in his hand to make his death appear to be suicide, was also the one who closed his eyes, not knowing that they should have remained open, no matter how he died?"

He paused, as if waiting for someone to speak, then as no one did, he continued:

"But that is not all, Roche. You should use your common sense. Here is Slyke, dead, with both hands by his sides, and the bedclothes up around his neck and over his chin. You don't expect me to believe that he could have shot himself, pulled the clothes around his neck, and then placed his arms by his sides. He did not have time enough for that; he died instantly, without even a struggle. A second after the shot was fired, this world was over as far as he was concerned. It was someone else who arranged those things. Someone who wished his death to appear to be suicide, and in trying to do that rather overdid the whole thing. No, I do not think there is the slightest doubt in the world but that he was murdered."

Roche had long since lost his confident air. He said nothing, though, even when Bartley had finished. The doctor, too, had listened with interest, yet I was not altogether sure that he wholly agreed with Bartley's reasoning.

"But, if Slyke was murdered," the doctor asked, "why should all this trouble have been taken to make it look like suicide?"

Bartley, who was bending over the bed examining the body, did not answer until he straightened up again.

"King," he said in a grave voice, "I am sure this is murder, not suicide. The person who killed him wished us to believe he killed himself. Moreover, he was not killed in bed."

Both the doctor and Roche looked as if this last statement were too unbelievable; and even I, who had long since ceased to be surprised at anything that Bartley might say, wondered a little.

"I have grave doubts if he was even killed in this room."

Winter Find You Tired and Achy?

DOES winter find you miserable with an aching back? Do you get up lame and stiff—lag through the day tired, weak and depressed? Do you know why you are so run down?

There's good reason for your condition and likely it's weak kidneys. Winter's colds and chills throw a heavy burden on the kidneys The kidneys fall behind and poisons accumulate. It's little wonder, then, that you suffer backache, rheumatic pains, headaches, dizziness and bladder irregularities.

Don't risk serious kidney disease. Use Doan's Kidney Pills before it is too late. Doan's have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor!

"Use Doan's," Say These Good Folks:

John Fennern, Bottineau, N. D., says: "I get attacks something like lumbago, which come from taking cold. I have been so lame in the muscles of my back and hips during these spells I have hardly been able to bend, and if I lifted anything my back hurt as though it would break. My back ached so badly right over my hips I could hardly get any rest at night. Doan's Kidney Pills, however, have always cured me of these attacks."

Mrs. D. Swan, W. 5th St., Hastings, Minn., says: "Hard, strenuous work weakened my kidneys. Heavy, bearing down pains across my kidneys bothered me and when I did any stooping they became more intense. Dizzy spells came on during the day and black spots danced before my eyes, blurring my sight. The worst trouble of all was the too free action of my kidneys and I became nervous. I knew Doan's Kidney Pills were good and after using three boxes my kidneys became strong and well."

FREEDOM FROM LAXATIVES

Discovery by Scientists Has Replaced Them.

Pills and salts give temporary relief from constipation only at the expense of permanent injury, says an eminent medical authority.

Science has found a newer, better way—a means as simple as Nature itself.

In perfect health a natural lubricant keeps the food waste soft and moving. But when constipation exists this natural lubricant is not sufficient. Medical authorities have found that the gentle lubricating action of Nujol most closely resembles that of Nature's own lubricant. As Nujol is not a laxative it cannot gripe. News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

Red Wing—It cost the city of Red Wing $252,027.94 to do business in 1922, according to figures in the annual report of City Clerk S. T. Irvin. This was about $30 for every man, woman and child in the city, basing figures on the last census.

Hibbing—Bids are to be opened here on Feb. 20 for the paving of 40 blocks of village streets. The village board at first had decided to pave only 30 blocks, but at its last meeting 10 additional blocks of paving were ordered.

Triumph—J. M. McConnell, grand master of the Masonic grand lodge of Minnesota, accompanied by other grand lodge officers, delivered the charter to Tri-mont lodge, composed of Masons from the "twin villages," Triumph and Monterey. Following formal presentation of the charter, the grand officers installed the officers of Tri-mont lodge.

St. Paul—The Pearson bill providing for a 50-50 split of all inheritance taxes with the county and the state was reconsidered in the House taxes and tax laws committee of the Minnesota legislature and after discussion was recommended for passage.

Austin—L. H. Marbell, of Buffalo Center, Iowa, was awarded the contracts for graveling 68 miles of roads in this county this year by the county board. The highest bid was $100,697.77 and the lowest $61,019.58, a difference of $39,678.19.

Red Wing—After a survey of the situation Louis P. Wolff, an engineer of St. Paul employed by the city, has made a report to the city council advising that an electric light and power plant can be constructed and maintained by the city with a fair prospect of reducing rates as the business grows.

Waseca—Orson L. Smith, a pioneer of Waseca county and county surveyor for 33 years, died at his home here. He was prominent in G. A. R., having marched with Sherman on his trip from Atlanta to the sea and later served in the Indian war in the Black Hills country under General Crooks. He was 78 years old.

Duluth—Representatives of the police departments of Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, meeting here, agreed upon certain changes in a proposed new police pension bill. The bill, as approved, provides for a flat minimum pension of $70 a month, the maximum to remain at $75. Another provision grants a policeman's widow and family $75 regardless of the number of children surviving. Furthermore, if the widow remains unmarried, each child will receive $10 a month until 16 years of age.

Roughton—The new $10,000 building recently erected by the Roughton Co-operative Creamery company, was dedicated with appropriate ceremonies. A banquet was served following the dedication exercises. The company has 231 shareholders. One-half of the cost of the new building was paid out of a sinking fund created a few years ago.

Owatonna—Officers were elected by the Owatonna Shrine club at their annual meeting here. C. A. Tincher was elected president; M. K. Brown, vicepresident; Will H. Darby, secretary and G. B. Bennett, treasurer.

Redwood Falls—A century anniversary automobile tour of the Sioux Historic trail from Fort Snelling through the Minnesota valley to Big Stone lake is being planned for the coming summer. In connection with the tour, a two day program will be given by the State Historical society at Redwood Falls, at the invitation of the Commercial club.

Hibbing—Considerable excitement was created in a local business place when a man holding a telephone receiver in his hand exclaimed, in apparent terror: "Take it! Take it before I drop it." A clerk relieved the man of the receiver, and then it was found that, although he is 80 years old, he had never before listened to a telephone message.

St. Paul—Governor Preus has called farmers and all others interested in our agricultural welfare, to give their aid and support to a conference of farmers, bankers, business men and public officials of the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Iowa, Wiconsin, Nebraska, Kansas, Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota to consider the means of stabilizing prices of farm products and thus remedying the deplorable condition in which agriculture now finds itself. There has been organized a Minnesota Farmers-Bankers Council, made up of two persons from each agricultural district. Members of this Council, farm bureau officials and others interested in agriculture, have joined in a call for a Northwest Agricultural Price Stabilization Conference, to be held in Saint Paul, February 27 and 28.

Hibbing—Vergilo Bertone of Chisholm, is the choice of the Italian Federated Clubs of Northern Minnesota for the appointment as deputy sheriff on the range. John Capra, of Hibbing, was the second choice. Mr. Bertone is a former mail carrier in Chisholm and a prominent union man. Capra is a former employe of Hibbing.

Lakefield—The city council has taken the first steps on a street paving program for Lakefield. It is proposed to pave the main business street of the city first. A mass meeting has been called for Feb. 13, at which time the matter will be finally discussed.

He Could Make It.

Early one morning before the new traffic towers were erected, one of the traffic policemen was rolling his "Stop and Go" sign to his station in the center of a street, when a man drove up on a heavily loaded hay wagon and proceeded to turn "left."

"Hey, you can't do that!" shouted the policeman, wrathfully.

"Oh, yes, I think I can make it," called back the man, cheerfully.

And it was necessary for the policeman to leave his post of duty to explain that although he possibly could "make it," the man had better keep to the right.—Indianapolis Star.

And There Are Many Such.

A man appeared at the children's home to adopt a boy. Among the children playing in the yard was a boy who had just arrived. He was ragged and dirty.

The man decided to take him and said: "Son, go get ready now and we shall soon be off."

"Mister," said the boy seriously, "I—I ain't got nothing to get ready with."—Exchange.

MANY WOMEN AVOID OPERATIONS

Through the Use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Two Interesting Cases

Some female troubles may through neglect reach a stage when an operation is necessary. But most of the common ailments are not the surgical ones; they are not caused by serious displacements, tumors or growths, although the symptoms may appear the same. When disturbing ailments first appear, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to relieve the present distress and prevent more serious troubles. Many letters have been received from women who have been restored to health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound after operations have been advised by attending physicians.

Mrs. Edwards Avoids Operation

Wilson, N. C.—"For about a year I was not able to do anything, not even my housework, because of the pains in my sides and the bearing-down pains. I could only lie around the house. The doctor said nothing but an operation would help me, but I tried different medicines which did no good, until my sister insisted on my trying Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She said there was nothing like it. I know that she was right, for I began to improve with the first bottle and it has done me more good than anything else. I am able now to do anything on the farm or in my home and I recommend it to my friends."—LILLIE EDWARDS, R.F.D. 3, Box 44, Wilson, N. C.

Another Operation Avoided

Akron, Ohio.—"I can never praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly for what it has done for me. I had such pains and weakness that the doctor told me nothing but an operation would help me. But my mother had taken the Vegetable Compound and she told me what it had done for her, and so I took it and I am glad to tell every one that it made me a strong woman, and I have had two children since then."—Mrs. R. Bright Idea.

He was full of his trip on the Berengaria, the biggest ship in the world, and, talking to his best girl between the acts of the play, he said:

"Do you know the Berengaria can steam 24 knots?"

"I suppose they steam the knots so that the sailors can untie them more easily. Is that it, George?"

The Cruel Retort.

They were seated on a little rustic bench. The moon shone through the trees. All at once the girl timidly said: "Jack, dear, I can't understand why you lavish all your affections on me above all other girls in the world. Why is it?"

"Hanged if I know," he replied, "and all the other fellows down at the house say that they can't make it out, either."—Denison Flamingo.

SETTLED THE WHOLE MATTER

Flapper Saw Dreadful Possibility if She Followed Advice Given Her by Business Woman.

The Capable Business Woman is an "employment expert" in one of the large downtown offices. The types that come to her are many and interesting. One girl applied. She wore clothes that were technically within the law, and no more. Her face wore a heavy mask of rouge and powder, while her "frizzled" bobbed hair was adorned with a ridiculous hat.

"I'd like a position as steno, here," she announced.

"I'm afraid I have nothing for you," replied the Business Woman somewhat coldly, and then becoming conscience-stricken at her total lack of sympathy with the flapper, she added in a friendlier tone: "May I give you a bit of advice? I hope you won't misunderstand me when I say you are not appropriately dressed for an office. You should dress more discreetly, otherwise you may be misjudged. Next time you apply for a position wear a dress with real sleeves, don't curl your hair so tightly, and if you must wear rouge, put it on sparingly. You might also get a semi-tailored hat—"

"Good heaven!" interrupted the flapper, aghast. "If I dressed that way I'd look like you."—New York Sun.

In Vanity's Eyes.

He was an old man and he was standing beside the hat counter of a department store.

"No, no!" he exclaimed angrily to the very young salesman, "I don't want that hat. Why, that's an old man's hat you're trying to give me. Show me something more suitable, boy."

Our idea of a foolish man is one who argues with a friend.

Too Reminiscent.

I overheard a remark the other evening which would form a good addition to that remarkable series of playfully satirical drawing by Du Maurier in "Punch," entitled, "Things one would rather have left unsaid." A very gushing lady and her daughter swept across a room and up to a little lady who was standing there and said: "My, how sweet you look this evening;" then turning to her daughter, remarked in a very audible tone, "My dear, she must have been lovely when she was young."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Due for Disappointment.

"Well, I'll tell you, Gap," said Zeke Lopp, "I aim to sell off some of my stuff, pack the rest of it and the old woman and children into the waggin, whistle to the dogs, and start for Oklahomy."

"All right," replied Gap Johnson of Rumpus Ridge. "But 'pears like I've heered, from two, three fellers that have been there, that the ravens hain't running no free boarding house in Oklahomy this year."—Kansas City Star.

"I Don't Sink So."

A little New York girl, eight years old, accompanied her mother to a studio exhibit where many rather languid ladies and gentlemen were viewing a poorly painted and rather questionable picture, about which they were making polite but insincere remarks. Into the middle of the studio to a place in front of the special canvas little Laura strode; after a moment's look at the picture she turned around and in a high-pitched voice cried out:

"Zat's a very bootiful sing, but I don't sink so!"—Youth's Companion.

What is good health worth to you?

HEALTH is priceless. You wouldn't knowingly part with it for anything in the world.

Why then do you risk it needlessly for the sake of a few cups of coffee? Coffee contains caffeine, a harmful drug which often interferes with nerves and digestion.

There's an easy, pleasant way to avoid this menace to health, without any sacrifice of comfort or satisfaction. Drink Postum instead of coffee.

A System of Farming That Brings Health and Prosperity

Every farm, regardless of the method of farming practiced or of the crops raised, should have at least a few good milch cows to provide
(1) Enough milk, cream and butter for home use;
(2) Enough skim-milk to raise some calves, pigs and chickens;
(3) Enough cream or butter to sell to pay, in part or entirely, current living expenses.

This plan has been a "life-saver" for thousands of farmers, especially during the hard times of the past two years. It insures a living, at least, and often other income besides.

Such a plan pays best with a De Laval Cream Separator. It soon pays for itself—and skims cleaner, lasts longer and is easier to operate and clean than any other.

Mortgage Foreclosure Sale

Notice is hereby given that default has been made in the conditions of that certain mortgage executed and delivered by Lewis Anderson and Lena Anderson, his wife, mortgagors, to Northwestern Trust Company, trustee under the last Will and Testament of Patrick F. Lyons, deceased, mortgagees, dated August 20, 1917, recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Marshall County, September 13, 1917, at 2:30 o'clock P. M. in Book 87 of Mortgages on Page 231, which default consists in the failure of said mortgagors to make payment of the sum of Five thousand dollars ($5000) principal and Three hundred dollars ($300) represented by an interest coupon by said mortgage secured which became due September 1, 1922. And whereas there is actually due and claimed to be due and payable the sums of Five thousand dollars principal and Three hundred dollars interest coupon with interest upon both amounts at six per cent per annum since September 1, 1922, being a total due and claimed to be due and payable at the date of this notice of Five thousand four hundred nineteen and and 25-100 dollars ($5419.25), and no action or proceeding at law or otherwise having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof,

Now, Therefore, Notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, to-wit:

The East half (E1-2) of the Southwest quarter (SW1-4), and the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of Section Twenty-one (21) in Township One hundred fifty-eight (158), North of Range Forty-five (45) excepting therefrom two acres described as follows:

Beginning at the Northeast corner of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of the Southeast quarter (SE1-4) of said Section twenty-one in said Township and Range, running west five chains, thence south four chains, thence east five chains, thence north four chains to the starting point. All of the above being in the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances, which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Marshall County at the front door of the courthouse in the city of Warren in said County and State on the 13th day of March, 1923, at ten o'clock A. M., at public vendue to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt of $5,419.25 and interest from date of this notice and taxes, if any, and an attorney's fee of One hundred dollars ($100) as stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from date of sale as provided by law.

Dated January 16, 1923.

MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE SALE

Whereas, default has been made in the conditions of a certain Mortgage duly executed and delivered by Oliver Martin, a single man, Mortgagor to Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee, bearing date the 9th day of February, 1920, and with the power of sale therein contained, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Marshall and State of Minnesota, on the 6th day of March 1920, at 9:00 o'clock A. M., in Book 98 of Mortgages on Page 615, and

Whereas, the said Peter N. Bengtson, Mortgagee and holder of said Mortgage, has duly elected and does hereby elect to declare the whole principal sum of said Mortgage due and payable at the date of this notice under the terms and conditions of said Mortgage and the power of sale therein contained, and whereas there is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon said mortgage and the debt secured thereby the total sum of $1777.80, being the amount of principal and interest secured by the mortgage hereby being foreclosed, and whereas the power of sale has become operative and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the debt secured by said Mortgage or any part thereof,

NOW, THEREFORE, Notice is Hereby Given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said Mortgage, and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said Mortgage, viz: The Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southeast Quarter (SE1-4), East Half (E1-) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) and Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Southwest Quarter (SW1-4) of Section Thirty-three (33) in Township One Hundred Fifty-seven (157) North of Range Forty-four (44) West, except that piece or parcel or strip of land 100 feet wide, being 50 feet in width on each side of the center line of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste Marie Railway track as the same is now located across the S1-2SW1-4 of Section 33, 157-44, in Marshall County and State of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Marshall County at the West Front door of the Court House in the City of Warren in said County and State, on the 24th day of February 1923, at 10 o'clock A. M. of that day, at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay said debt of $1777.80, and interest and taxes, if any on said premises, and attorneys fees as stipulated in and by said mortgage, in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from day of sale, as provided by law.

A Good Living and Something Besides

With cows and a De Laval Separator, you are sure of a good living and often something besides. With cream or butter to sell, bringing in a steady cash income; with milk, cream and butter for your table; and with skim-milk to raise calves, pigs and chickens, you are absolutely safe.

And the De Laval Separator has done more than any other factor to make this so. It is the original separator, skims cleaner under all conditions, wears longer, and is easier to operate and clean than any other. We shall be glad to prove this to you. Give us an opportunity.

COURT DENIES RECEIVERSHIP

Equity Exchange Will Be Completely Reorganized---Thiel and Swanson Lose Jobs.

POOLERS WILL BE PAID

Two Iowans to Be New President and Vice President—Noltimeir Will Remain as Member of Board of Directors.

St. Paul—The petition for a receivership for the Equity Co-operative Exchange was dismissed by Judge Charles Bechhoefer in district court following an agreement between rival factors for the reorganization of the Equity's affairs.

The reorganization, it was announced, will be made on a business basis with several changes in the board of directors and management, with closer co-operation promised between the organization and St. Paul business and financial interests.

The receivership suit was brought by several stockholders and members of the exchange who alleged mismanagement among other charges.

Poolers to Be Paid.

Under the agreement reached, several hundred stockholders who pooled their grain with the exchange will receive some $40,000 additional on their claims. One provision of the settlement allows more time to the exchange to meet its obligations to the poolers.

Paul P. Moore, vice president of the Farmers' Union of Iowa will become president of the exchange, supplanting Louis Noltimeir of Valley City, N. D., who has been at the head of the concern for several months.

Charles H. Watts, manager for the Iowa Union of Livestock Agencies at Chicago, South St. Paul and Omaha, will succeed C. B. Swanson as general manager of the exchange. Mr. Swanson, G. A. Thiel, and Benjamin Drake, Minneapolis attorney, will resign their positions on the board of directors. Emil Systestav was named temporary secretary. Mr. Watts, Mr. Moore, and another man to be named will be placed on the board of directors.

Noltimeir on Board.

Mr. Noltimeir will remain as a member of the board of directors, and with Mr. Moore, Mr. Watts, and Ole Olson of New Rockford, N. D., will constitute the executive committee of the organization.

In a statement commenting on the reorganization, the management said a "feeling of profound confidence and satisfaction was restored to the entire organization."

"The unfortunate differences that had prevailed in the past were entirely removed by this new and neutral management," the statement said.

"The dispute of the company with the members who had pooled their grain, as to the expenses and returns of the pooling arrangement, was adjusted substantially on the basis of the recommendation of the arbitration committee of farmers who had acted on the matter at the last annual meeting of the stockholders in Fargo."

RATE PROBE IS ORDERED

Bismarck, N. D.—An investigation into railroad freight rates on grain and grain products, particularly with a view to removing alleged discriminations existing against Grand Forks, where the state-owned mill and elevator is located, has been ordered by the state railroad commission.

The order is directed to the Chicago and Northwestern Railway company, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Farmers Grain and Shipping company, the Great Northern, the Midland Continental, the Soo line, and the Northern Pacific. No date is set for hearing of the matter.

The order of the commission says: "It appearing upon numerous complaints to this commission that the rates of enumerated railroads are unreasonable, unjust, and discriminatory, and impose a burden on the shippers of these common duties within the State of North Dakota, and it further appearing that the state mill and elevator at Grand Forks, N. D., will have to compete with mills in Minnesota having more favorable freight rate conditions on the commodities herein enumerated, than obtain in connection with the state mill and elevator at Grand Forks, this condition being preferential to mills in Minnesota and unlawfully prejudicial to the mills in North Dakota, and it appearing that Grand Forks, because of the grain terminals now in existence is a primary market and reasonably entitled to rate structures as they exist at other primary grain markets."

Filibuster to Block Ship Bill.

Washington—Efforts of opponents of the administration shipping bill to kill it through a filibuster, were actively begun in the senate, and brought from Senator Jones, Republican of Washington, in charge of the measure, a notice that he would endeavor to hold the senate in session all night. The filibuster as started took the form of an address of three hours and a half by Senator Sheppard, Democrat of Texas, on the operations of the League of Nations since its organization.

FOUR SHIPS WRECKED

British Freighter Tuscan Prince Lashed to Pieces on Rocks

Seattle—A number of lives were lost when the British steamer Tuscan Prince went ashore near Estevan, Vancouver Island, and was lashed to pieces on the rocks, according to a radio message received from the sea tug Monarch.

The Tuscan Prince was one of four ships wrecked in a stiff gale that is sweeping the upper Pacific coast.

Thirty-four sailors were rescued from the steaemr Niki which burned to the water edge. The coast guard cutter Snohomish, which went to the steamship's aid in response to its distress call, reported the rescue. It did not state the ship's location.

The steamship Santa Rita which was searching for the disabled Niki has also gone on the rocks at the entrance of Puget Sound, said a message picked up at San Francisco.

FRENCH MASSING ARTILLERY

Circle of Steel Is Drawn About German City by Invaders.

Amsterdam—Hostility of the Germans against the French has risen to such a pitch, especially at Essen and in the industrial and mining towns in that district, that the French are rushing military preparations to meet an actual uprising, according to information from the German frontier.

Artillery, tanks, armored cars and cavalry have been massed in a solid circle about Essen so that the French can isolate and shell the city at the first outbreak. Preparations have been completed for throwing up earth works along the "front".

BIG BERTHA IS REVEALED

Had Range of 132,000 Yards Compared With 39,000 of U. S. Piece.

Washington—Army statistics credit the German super gun that pounded Paris during the war with a range of 132,000 yards as compared to the 39,000 yard maximum range of American 14-inch naval guns. The German projectile for which figures are given, however, was 8.26 inches in diameter and weighed but 264 pounds as compared with the 1,400 pound, 14-inch monster used in the American gun.

FIRE SWEEPING OMAHA PLANT

Firemen Fight 18 Hours in Zero Weather to Save Buildings.

Omaha, Neb.—After an 18-hour fight in zero weather, with the fire at the plant of Armour & Company, it was reported that the flames were attacking the lard refineries, and threatening to spread to other buildings. The majority of Omaha's fire fighting forces is concentrated on the scene to control the blaze.

American Company Refuses to Finance Further Factory in Moscow.

Moscow—A proposal for nationalization of the International Harvester company's plant in Moscow has been made, according to Economic Life, because the company refuses to finance further its Russian factory. The correspondent learns that the plant is still operating under private management.

Jury Returns Indictments.

Denver, Colo.—Indictments charging operation of a confidence game and larceny were returned by the Denver County grand jury against J. H. French, John Scott, alias G. H. Stanley and H. C. Hathaway in connection with the alleged swindling of George Kanavuth, wealthy Sapulpa, Okla., commission merchant, out of $25,000. French now is on trial with 21 other alleged confidence men for alleged participation in the fleecing of a number of victims. Scott is in St. Joseph, Mo., where he is said to be at liberty.

News Briefs from All the State

Condensed Stories of Happenings of the Week in Minnesota

St. James—A gain of $19,937.68 in buisness over 1921 was reported at the annual meeting of the St. James Shipping association. The association shipped 114 cars of livestock and hogs to the South St. Paul market.

Hibbing—Contracts, which totaled more than $50,000 were let by the Hibbing board of education at a meeting in the new high school here.

Willmar—A farmer's co-operative elevator will be erected at Lake Lilian, the new station on the Luce Electric line in Kandiyohi county. A co-operative association has been formed and a committee of six men appointed to solicit shares and draw up the articles of incorporation.

Hibbing—Range druggists, after a regular monthly meeting at the Androy hotel, indorsed Claude Mather of Eveleth, well known range druggist for a place on the state board of pharmacy.

Minneapolis—Erection of the new $3,500,000 Nicollet hotel is assured, according to Joseph Chapman, chairman of the stock sales executive committee which has been charged with the task of directing the disposal of the $1,250,000 issue of 7 per cent cumulative preferred stock to complete the financing of the undertaking.

Faribault—August Kolterman, a farmer, 28 years old, died at his home near Fox Lake following the alleged drinking of liquor at a party. It is reported two neighbors of Kolterman also partook of the liquor and were made ill, but recovered. The sheriff and coroner are investigating.

Fergus Falls—Ferd Hartvig, a farmer of Pine Island, was severely injured and his two horses were instantly killed when a Northern Pacific coast train struck the team he was driving at a crossing in Perham. Hartvig was thrown a considerable distance, receiving a fractured skull and many body bruises.

St. Paul—Minnesota, with 58 per cent of the urban population living in zoned municipalities, ranks third among the states on the basis of percentage of urban population zoned, according to a report made public by the division of building and housing of the department of commerce.

Fairbault—With prospects for a bigger building season than ever before in the history of the city, the second annual Builders show at Faribault will be staged March 8, 9 and 10. Thirty-five to 40 business firms will participate in the show and several twin city jobbing firms in building materials and house furnishings also will be represented.

Austin—In the subdistrict high school oratorical and declamation contest here Louis Usem of Austin won the oratorical division with the oration "Americanization." Second place in this division was won by John Martinson of Adams, with "A Plea for Cuba." Mildred Lee Galbraith of Grand Meadow won the declamatory division. Katheryn Albertson of Austin, with "Pomance," was second.

Bemidji—An order denying the petition for the improvement of the channel of the Red Lake river, as requested by the Red Lake Drainage and conservancy board, has been signed by Judge Andrew Grindeland of Warren and Judge C. W. Stanton of Bemidji. The Red Lake drainage and conservancy project has been in progress for several years and a hearing was held at Thief River Falls recently to determine whether the work should begin on the project as recommended by the engineers.

Cloquet—Katherine Campbell of Cloquet won first place in the high school declamation contest in the subdistrict meet here, reciting "The Finger of God." Ada Thompson of Barnum, with "Madam Butterfly," was second, and Evelyn Belander, of Duluth Denfield high, third, with "Pro Patria." In the oratorical contest Elliott Ingebretson of Denfield high, Duluth, took first; Ben Hnuter, Crosby, second, and Donald Rich, Cloquet, third. Towns represented in the contest were Crosby, Barnum, Cloverton, Sandstone, Denfield of Duluth, and Cloquet.

Duluth—Tales of the "frozen north" have little or nothing more strange to tell than the story of how men of the state highway department of Minnesota have plowed 5,000 people out of five feet of snow for two winters—last year and this. In the desolate country along the shore of Lake Superior, in Lake and Cook counties, 5,000 persons are dependent on roads for their communication with the outside world. There is a railroad, but in winter it is abandoned under several feet of snow. This is why the state has provided giant motor driven snowplows to keep clear a stretch of 100 miles of road.

Luverne — At the annual meeting of the Hills Co-operative Creamery association, the secretary's report showed that more than $81,000 worth of business was transacted last year. More than 224,000 pounds of butter were sold and the butter fat was supplied by 1,226 cows.

Winona—The annual Winona automobile show will be conducted at the armory here four days, beginning Feb. 28, dealers announced. Thirteen dealers will be represented by the latest model cars, while accessories will also be exhibited. Seven thousand persons attended the last year's show.

Red Wing—After a survey of the situation Louis P. Wolff, an engineer of St. Paul employed by the city, has made a report to the city council advising that an electric light and power plant can be constructed and maintained by the city with a fair prospect of reducing rates as the business grows.

Albert Lea—The modern consolidated school building of Freeborn village has been opened. Five new buses carry the children to and from school. One feature of the new school is a complete high school course. The building was constructed at a cost of $75,000.

Slayton—The sale of a Cameron township farm is good evidence that this section is recovering from the recent slump in the price of real estate. Gus Ziemon has just sold a 160 acre farm three mile north of Lake Wilson to Fred Helmke at $128 per acre.

Springfield—Bids will be opened for a new church for St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran congregation of this city. The structure will be 62x119 feet, with a steeple rising to a height of 119 feet. The building will cost between $60,000 and $70,000, and will seat 1,200 people.

Owatonna—Officers were elected by the Owatonna Shrine club at their annual meeting here. C. A. Tincher was elected president; M. K. Brown, vicepresident; Will H. Darby, secretary and G. B. Bennett, treasurer.

Rushford — Constantine Nestande, representing Lanesboro High school, was the winner in the boys division in the sub-district declamatory contest between Spring Valley, Proston, Lanesboro, Houston and Rushford. Thelma Berg, Rushford, won the girls' contest. These two will represent these schools in the district contest on March 2.

Pipestone—Since the controversy has come up concerning the number of past masters Masonic lodges have in the cities of Minnesota the Masons of Pipestone have been doing some investigation. It is found that the Pipestone Masonic lodge has 25 past masters living, 18 of whom are new residents of Pipestone.

Plummer—Twice overcome by monoxide gas while he was in his garage with the engine of his car running, Paul Schoenauer of this town was rescued after he fell the third time, by a girl who called to advise him of a long distance telephone call. Mr. Schoenauer fell to the floor when first overcome, and when he revived and stood up to reach his coat he was again overcome. He was unconscious when found by the telephone girl, but soon revived.

Willmar—The Northwestern Bell Telephone company of Willmar, will ask the railroad and warehouse commission for permission to raise the telephone rates. The company is requested by the council to put the wires under ground, a job that will cost the company more than $14,000. According to John Williams, manager, the company is making only 3 per cent on its present investment.

Little Falls—The fifteenth district, Minnesota Co-operative Creamery association, will have its annual meeting in Little Falls Thursday, Feb. 22. About 100 delegates are expected to attend the meeting. A. J. McGuire of St. Paul, is expected to preside and several other prominent dairymen will attend, among them V. Lockwood of Motley, director of the state association.

Albert Lea—The first session of the district court with Judge N. E. Peterson presiding for the first time, convened here. Judge Peterson was appointed by Governor J. A. O. Preus to succeed the late Ralph Parker of Spring Valley, who died recently at Rochester.

Albert Lea—Officials of the Southern Minnesota Gas & Electric company announced the purchase of the gas plant of the Rochester Utility company at Rochester. The Rochester plant has about 2,100 patrons and a capacity three times that of the Albert Lea plant. The company also announced the purchase of the Iowa-Minnesota Power company, which for some time has been under the direct management of the Southern Minnesota Gas & Electric company. This new acquisition will add 35 towns in Iowa and southern Minnesota to the Southern Minnesota Gas & Electric company. The headquarters of the company will be retained in Albert Lea.

St. Paul—Governor Preus has called farmers and all others interested in our agricultural welfare, to give their aid and support to a conference of farmers, bankers, business men and public officials of the states of North Dakota, South Dakota, Montana, Iowa, Wiconsin, Nebraska, Kansas, Illinois, Michigan and Minnesota to consider the means of stabilizing prices of farm products and thus remedying the deplorable condition in which agriculture now finds itself. There has been organized a Minnesota Farmers-Bankers Council, made up of two persons from each agricultural district. Members of this Council, farm bureau officials and others interested in agriculture, have joined in a call for a Northwest Agricultural Price Stabilization Conference, to be held in Saint Paul, February 27 and 28.

Windom—Petitions have been circulated in Cottonwood and Jackson counties asking the legislature to pass a law opening up lakes in the state to the public by authorizing the commissioners of a county to lay out roads to a lake that is inaccessible to the public.

Slayton—An electric transmission highpower line will be built from Pipestone to Slayton for the purpose of furnishing this city with electricity. Slayton parties have entered into a contract with the Northern States Power company to have the transmission line constructed.

WOMAN SO ILL COULD NOT STAND

Says Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Made Her Well and Strong

Glens Falls, N. Y.—"For over two months I was so sick I was not able to stand on my feet, and my husband did my housework. The doctor said an operation might be necessary. I read testimonial letters about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began to take it. Before I had finished taking the first bottle I saw what good it was doing me. I am now well and strong, doing all my work for a family of four, all my washing and my sewing, which I think is remarkable, as I had not dared to run my sewing machine, but had done all my sewing by hand. I truly feel that were it not for your medicine I would not be here today as my case seemed very serious."—Mrs. George W. Burchell, Glens Falls, N. Y.

THE BALCONY

John Bartley, noted criminal investigator, recently returned from Secret Service work during the war, is asked by the governor of New York to investigate a mysterious attempted robbery of the Robert Slyke home at Circle Lake, near Saratoga, and to establish the guilt or innocence of two men in the penitentiary for the crime. A miscarriage of justice is suspected. Bartley finds in it the restaging of an old case, is interested and agrees to solve the mystery. With his friend Pelt, a newspaper man, Bartley goes to Circle Lake, the pair becoming the guests of Bob Currie, an old friend. The three visit the Slyke home. Slyke resents Bartley's coming, saying he is satisfied the two men in prison are guilty. Bartley is not. Next morning Slyke is found dead in bed, apparently having shot himself. Miss Potter, the dead man's sister-in-law, the village police chief, Roche, and the family physician, Doctor King, all agree Slyke killed himself, but Bartley insists he was murdered.

"When you look at the pillow," he explained, "on which his head lies, you will find only one or two spots of blood. The shirt, in fact, has none at all. The wound must have bled some—not much, it is true, but far more than it seems to have done from the appearance of the bed. He was killed elsewhere and placed in this bed afterwards. I doubt if he was even undressed at the time of his death."

Miss Potter, who had remained silent although obviously very nervous, asked if she might go to her room and leave the doctor in charge. This delegating of her authority to the doctor did not appeal to Roche; and he told her that, if her brother-in-law had been murdered, it would be the police and not the doctor who would take charge of things. The ordeal through which she had passed must have been more than she could stand, for she made no comment on his challenge but started to leave the room.

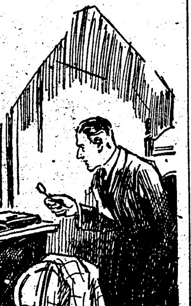
"Miss Potter," Bartley asked, as she reached the door, "did you ever see this revolver in Mr. Slyke's hand?"

She hesitated a moment and then replied, "It's Mr. Slyke's; he was in the habit of keeping it in a drawer of his desk. The gun was bought soon after the burglary, but, so far as I know, he has never used it."

Although her statement that the revolver had belonged to the dead man made the suicide theory plausible, yet I could not quite see how the facts that Bartley had brought forward to disprove the suicide could be overthrown.

"What makes you think, Mr. Bartley," Roche asked, "that Slyke was dressed at the time he was killed?"

Bartley answered: "If Slyke had been killed in bed there would have been more blood on the bedclothes than the few drops we see on the pillow. His nightshirt, too, if it had been worn at the time he was killed, would have had some traces of blood on it. There are no such stains. This, and the fact that death must have been instantaneous, makes me feel sure that he was undressed after he was killed and then placed on the bed in the position in which we have found him."



Bartley Began a Search of the Room, Using a Small Glass Once or Twice as If He Were Looking for Finger-Prints.

Bartley began a search of the room, using a small glass once or twice as if he were looking for finger-prints. Slyke's clothes were flung over a chair, and one of his stockings had fallen to the floor. The way the gray suit lay on the chair made me wonder if Bartley was right when he said the murderer had undressed him after the crime. It looked so much as if it had been carelessly flung there by a man preparing for bed.

After going through Slyke's pockets Bartley said slowly, "I have grave doubts if he was even killed in this room."

He continued to examine the room, searching the floor, looking into the drawers of the desk, examining the walls even; then he came back to the clothing. Picking up the blue silk shirt from the chair, he examined it a second time before he said: "I was right. He was not killed in this room. Here is the suit he wore. You will notice that all his clothing is placed on this chair in the manner that a man would naturally place it if he was undressing for bed. But there is no button in the front of his shirt to hold his collar, and one stocking is missing. Any man may lose a collar button, but if he does, that button will be dropped at the place where he undressed. No button is in this room. It was lost in the room in which he was undressed. We find his shoes here but only one stocking, and we naturally ask where is the other stocking. Then, too, there are no blood stains anywhere in this room. Though his wound did not bleed much, it must have bled some. These are the reasons why I say he was not killed in this room, or even undressed here."

His explanation seemed reasonable enough, yet somewhat mystifying. Why had the murderer taken all this trouble to undress Slyke, and why had he done it in some other room? The next question was just as puzzling. If Slyke had not been killed in this room, where had the crime taken place? As if he had read my thoughts, Roche suggested that as there was another room in the tower, we might see what could be found there.

The butler, who entered at this moment, did his best not to glance at the bed. He was holding with great difficulty a half-grown Airedale that growled fiercely when he saw us. The butler motioned to the doctor to come to him. As he reached his side, Doctor King placed his hand upon the dog's head and it ceased to show its teeth and licked his fingers. For several moments he and the butler held a low conversation, then King turned to us to say that he had just been called to the hospital for an operation and would have to leave at once.

Bartley scribbled something on a piece of paper, and handing it to the doctor said, "I think there ought to be a picture taken of the body so it can be used at the inquest."

The doctor agreed and went out, accompanied by the butler. As the door closed behind them Bartley went to lock it, but the key was missing. After a moment's hesitation he decided it would do no harm to leave it unlocked while we were gone, and we all started for the floor above.

The room we entered was of the same size as the one in which we had found Slyke. Here, too, there was little furniture—three chairs grouped around a little table in the center of the room, a lounge in one corner, a small desk in another. It was the table that attracted Bartley's attention. On it stood a half-emptied bottle of Scotch whisky, and beside the bottle three glasses, one of them holding about a spoonful of liquor. Near one of the glasses was a half-smoked cigarette and a magazine, and on the opposite side of the table the stub of a cigar. Bartley looked at both of them with keen interest and finally placed them in an envelope. The cigarette must have been a very high-priced one, for the end was of the finest straw. The appearance of the table suggested that three men had been present and that two of them had been smoking. A conference, perhaps, at which a bottle of whisky had assisted. Aside from the table, there seemed to be nothing of interest in the room.

While Bartley was still glancing at the table, I walked over to the large window and drew aside the heavy curtain that reached to the floor. At my feet was a playing card that had been concealed by its folds. Glancing around to see if there were any others and finding none, I brought the card to Bartley.

As I stepped to his side, I saw that he was examining the magazine. Like many magazines, the back carried a gaudy advertisement that covered the entire page. This one had an unusual amount of unused white space. Bartley pointed silently to where someone had idly amused himself by drawing on it with a pencil, a habit many people have. The design was simple, only a mass of scrolls, with a little figure here and there, and lines runung through them.

Whatever it meant to Bartley, the mass of zeros held no significance to me. He did not enlighten me, but placed the magazine in his pocket. Then I showed him the playing card and told him where I found it. He asked, "Are there no more?" I was answering, "No," when Roche interrupted, "Yes, there is one."

He pointed to the stairway that led to the top of the tower. There, lying under the bottom step, was a second playing card with the same design on the back as the one I had found. What were they doing in that room? Bartley smiled to himself as he examined the second card.

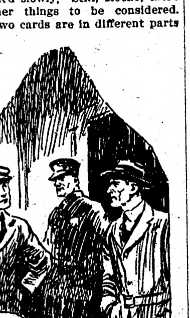
Roche asked, "What do they mean?"

With a gesture that might have meant anything, it was so expressive, Bartley replied, "They had a card party downstairs last night."

Roche was excited in a moment. "I'll tell you what it means. Someone at that party killed Slyke, followed him up here and killed him."

It was not a half-bad theory, and even Bartley did not protest as much as I had thought he would. Instead he said, "There is something in what you say, Roche. We must look first for the person who had the chance to kill him. You assume that after the party the person who dropped these cards did what any absent-minded person might do. That is, he placed the cards of his last hand in his pocket. He may have followed Slyke up here, hidden behind the curtain, and as he killed him dropped some of his cards on the floor."

He paused, half frowned, as if the theory did not quite appeal to him, and added slowly, "Still, Roche, there are other things to be considered. Those two cards are in different parts of the room; not together as we might have expected if they had been dropped by accident. It looks to me as if they might have been placed where we found them by design. As if someone wished us to think just what you thought. Then there is that bottle of whisky and the three glasses. All three glasses have been drunk from. The glasses show that they were all used at about the same time. Evidently two of the men smoked; the third did not. What I wonder is, were these three persons in the room at one and the same time?"



"There Must Be Blood Spots Somewhere, Yet Where? There Are None in This Room."

Roche, who had long since lost his air of self-satisfaction, now offered to help us make a thorough examination of the room. When we had ended our unsuccessful search, Bartley stood silent, a puzzled expression on his face.

"It's more mysterious than ever," he said at last. "I am sure he was not killed in the room below. I am also sure he was not killed here. There must be blood spots somewhere, yet where? There are none in this room."

He went to the window and glanced out, then came back and glanced up at the steps that led to the roof. All at once his face brightened, and motioning us to follow him he bounded up the seven steps to the little door that opened onto the balcony. We followed more slowly.

We found ourselves on a balcony some four feet wide that ran around the tower. About eight or ten feet below its bronze-tipped top, an iron railing protected the edge of the balcony and was covered with ivy, as were also the sides of the tower itself. Bartley paused for a moment, standing with his hand on the rail, his face serious, his eyes thoughtful. But it was for a moment only; the next he was out of sight around the tower. Almost instantly we heard him call us, and when we reached his side he was on his knees examining the floor and the lower part of the wall. Looking where he pointed, I saw at his feet a dark splotch on the floor of the balcony, and a little higher up several similar spots on the wall of the tower. I realized that, at last, he had found what he had been looking for. There was no doubt that the splotches we saw were blood, and that it had been shed within a few hours. Had he expected to find them just where he did? I wondered.

"You say I know who killed him—I—I know?"

MOTHER RESCUES BOY FROM WELL

Had Broken Through Rotten Planking and Plunged 65 Feet to Bottom.

HUNG ON TILL SAVED

Incident Produces Three Heroes and Neighbors Find It Difficult to Decide Which of Three Is Bravest.

Ashland, Kan.—Western Clark county has three heroes, and it scarcely knows which of the three is bravest. They are Clarence Edwards, three years old; Clarence's mother, Mrs. Florence Edwards, and Charles Dobbs, a neighbor of the Edwards family.

Neighbors say they will take steps looking toward the bestowing of some kind of recognition or token on all three.

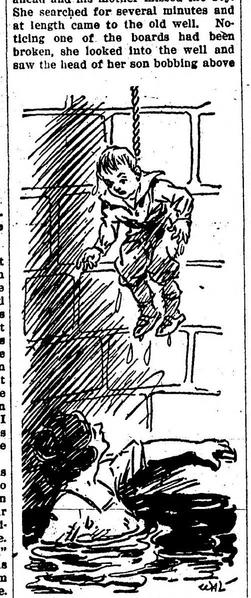
For a quarter of an hour the child clung to the top of casing near the bottom of a 65-foot water well, his head barely above the level of the water, which was 12 feet deep. He had fallen through the boards at the top of the well.

The mother insisted on being let down into the well by a rope, untying herself, tying it around her son, and stayed in water herself a quarter of an hour, waiting for help to hoist her to the top.

Stands on Rotten Boards.

Dobbs stood on the rotten boards covering the well while lowering the mother and hoisting up the child, at the risk of plunging through the boards himself.

The Edwards family was visiting at the home of Mrs. Edwards' father. The mother and her son were walking about the farm. The child ran ahead and his mother missed the boy. She searched for several minutes and at length came to the old well. Noticing one of the boards had been broken, she looked into the well and saw the head of her son bobbing above the water, nearly 60 feet below. The child, apparently, was holding to the top of the casing near the water level.



The Boy Was Hauled Up to Safety.

Summons Neighbors.

The mother ran to a nearby house and summoned Dobbs. He procured a rope and they ran to the well, to find the child still holding on.

Mrs. Edwards fastened one end of the rope around her waist. Dobbs stood on the well covering and lowered Mrs. Edwards. Holding to the side of the casing with one hand, she untied the rope and retied it about her son, and the boy was hauled up to safety.

When an attempt was made to hoist Mrs. Edwards after Bobbs had let down the rope again he found he was unequal to the task. He ran for more help and the efforts of several neighbors were enlisted before Mrs. Edwards could be lifted from the well.

EXILED FOR TRYING TO FLIRT

Man Told to Leave Chicago and Remain Absent Forever, and He Agrees.

Chicago.—Claude Wyant, thirty-eight years old, was exiled from Chicago for attempting to flirt with a young woman. He agreed to leave the city and never return, rather than suffer some more severe penalty.

Wyant carried a large pack of business cards, indicating a range of activities including a lawyer, a theatrical manager, and a newspaper man.

ROAD BUILDING

COLORADO DOUBLES MILEAGE

More Than 60 Per Cent of Roads Have Been Improved During Past Seven Years.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Colorado has more than doubled its mileage of improved road in the last seven years, according to the bureau of public roads of the United States Department of Agriculture, which has made an extensive investigation as to the highway mileage and revenue of the state.

In 1914 there was 13,298 miles of improved road and a total of 39,780 miles, while in 1921 the improved mileage had increased to 29,540 miles and a total of 48,143 miles.

The improved road at the present time is classified as follows: Graded and drained, 24,941 miles; sand, clay and gravel, 4,397 miles; macadam, 131 miles; other types of surfacing, 71 miles.

While most of the improved road in this state is what is known as low-type road, the fact that more than 60 per cent of the total mileage has been improved constitutes a record that will be envied by many.

A Concrete Cement Road in Colorado.

For each square mile of area the road revenue amounts to $85.56, and there is one-half mile of road. The total road revenue amounts to $9.35 per capita, $182.07 per mile of road, and totals $8,765,443.

DIRT ROADS WASTE GASOLINE

Gallon of Fuel Necessary to Drive Car Six Miles on Earth and Twelve on Hard.

An investigation carried on by an automobile manufacturer showed that the consumption of a gallon of gasoline was necessary to drive a machine six miles on the average earth roads as against twelve miles on the hard-surfaced roads, according to Automobile Topics. These figures would indicate a saving in gasoline, on the basis of 400 vehicles per mile a day, of 50,000,000 gallons on 10,000 miles of improved roads. At 24 cents a gallon this amounts to $12,000,000, or more than enough to pay 5 per cent interest on the investment.

One billion, seven hundred million dollars per year will pay $15,500,000,000 of 5 per cent bonds (principal and interest) in a little less than twelve years. In other words, if we could immediately lay down 2,500,000 miles of public highway at a cost of $15,500,000,000, borrowing the money to do it with at 5 per cent interest, the $1,700,000,000 saved to the producers of farm products in the one item of reduced cost of moving their annual crops to market would pay off the debt, principal and interest, in less than twelve years.

ANCIENT PAVING MATERIALS

Romans Used Brick as Early as 44 A. D.—Sumarians Were First to Use Asphalt.

As early as 44 A. D. the Romans used bricks in England. Actual scientific and quantity production did not begin, however, until 886, when Alfred the Great directed that bricks be produced under government supervision. The earliest recorded use of asphalt was by the Sumarians, a people inhabiting the Euphrates valley prior to the ascendancy of the Babylonians. An asphalt cast excavated at Logash, near the mouth of the Euphrates, dates back to 2850 B. C. As a mortar for brick, similar to the filler now used in brick streets, asphalt was used in the construction of the Tower of Babel.

WOULD NOT TRADE FOR $10,000 CASH

Benefits From Tanlac in Ending His Stomach and Rheumatic Troubles, Priceless, States Tucker.

"I wouldn't take $10,000 for the good Tanlac has done me," declared W. E. Tucker, 1120 North 28th St., Richmond, Va., a boxmaker for the Allegheny Box Co., recently.

"I thought I would have to give up the job I had been on seventeen years, but Tanlac has built me up eighteen pounds, and I never felt better in my life.

"I was so weak and run down and had lost so much weight and strength I just felt broken down all the time. I got up mornings awfully nervous, with no appetite, feeling like I hadn't slept a wink, and while on the job my nerves were so unstrung that the noise in the factory just tortured me. My liver wasn't acting right, and I suffered so much from rheumatism I could hardly use my arms.

"But Tanlac has made a clean sweep of my troubles, and now, with plenty of strength and energy, I am working and feeling fine."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Over 35 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

"What on earth is that for?" he was asked.

"Why," was the reply, "don't the script say Carter meets Floria and presses his suit?"

DYED HER BABY'S COAT, A SKIRT AND CURTAINS WITH "DIAMOND DYES"

Each package of "Diamond Dyes" contains directions so simple any woman can dye or tint her old, worn, faded things new. Even if she has never dyed before, she can put a new, rich color into shabby skirts, dresses, waists, coats, stockings, sweaters, coverings, draperies, hangings, everything. Buy Diamond Dyes—no other kind—then perfect home dyeing is guaranteed. Just tell your druggist whether the material you wish to dye is wool or silk, or whether it is linen, cotton, or mixed goods. Diamond Dyes never streak, spot, fade or run.—Advertisement.

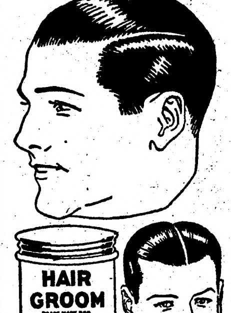
"Hair Groom" Keeps Hair Combed—Well-Groomed.



HAIR GROOM TRADE MARK REG. Keeps Hair Combed

Millions Use It—Fine for Hair!—Not Sticky, Greasy or Smelly.

Get a jar of "Hair-Groom" from any druggist for a few cents. Even stubborn, unruly or shampooed hair stays combed all day in any style you like. "Hair-Groom" is a dignified combing cream which gives that natural gloss and well-groomed effect to your hair—that final touch to good dress both in business and on social occasions.

• Greaseless, stainless "Hair-Groom" does not show on the hair because it is absorbed by the scalp, therefore your hair remains so soft and pliable and so natural that no one can possibly tell you used it.

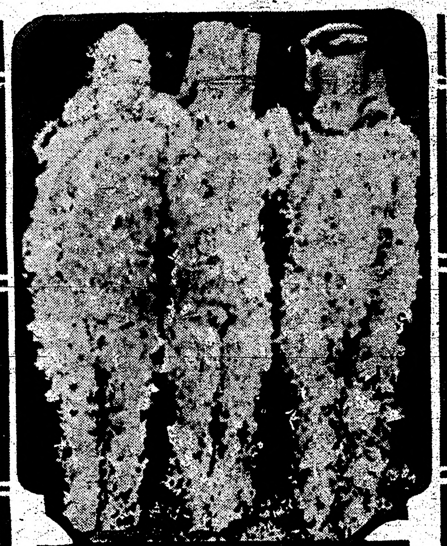
Lake and River Connected at New Orleans

The dream of New Orleans of one hundred years—the connecting up of the Mississippi and Lake Pontchartrain with a navigable waterway—was realized the other day when dock board dredges bored through the main levee and united the industrial canal with the river. The cost of the work was over $20,000,000. The illustration shows the water rushing through from the lake to the river when the break was made.

American Troops Ready for Winter Emergencies

The third battalion of the Third infantry, stationed at Fort Snelling, Minn., has been equipped with skis and snowshoes to be ready for any winter emergency that might come up in the snow-covered Northwest. The idea is that of Col. A. W. Bjornstad, commandant of Fort Snelling. The battalion is under the command of Maj. B. E. Brewer.

How Iowans Treat Hen Thieves



These three men were seized by a committee of vigilantes and treated to coats of tar and feathers. The flashlight photograph was secured by City Marshall John L. Spurr, who arrived on the scene too late to save the three men whom the vigilantes had charged with chicken stealing. The incident occurred at Sanborn, Iowa. Buckets in which the tar had been prepared were used to hide the faces of two of the victims. The third didn't need any covering other than the tar and feathers.

Claiming Land in Philadelphia

INTERNATIONAL

Left to right are Chief Amos S. Bear and Chief War Eagle of the Oneida tribe, who are in Philadelphia to establish claims to titles of property at Chestnut and Second streets, which they say is the property of the Six Nations, of which Chief War Eagle is the official interpreter and spokesman. The title to the land has not been clearly invested in the rights of the Indians, but every owner since the time of William Penn has failed to build on the property for fear of being dispossessed.

GUESS HIS PEDIGREE

"Rags" is his name, and he has caused excitement among dog fanciers of the Quaker city. The Philadelphia Kennel club introduced the dog at its annual show, and offered a cash prize of $300 to the person guessing its breed. The dog was found on the outskirts of the city, and seems at first glance to be a cross between an Airedale and a sheep dog. His coat is like a French poodle's, yet he is almost the size of a collie. "Rags" has the face of an Airedale, and when he stands and runs he has the appearance of an English setter.

Something to Think About

By F. A. WALKER

WORDS OF CHEER

IF YOU cannot give frequent, encouraging words of cheer to your home-mates and to those with whom you come in contact during your working hours, it would be better to bridle your tongue and seal your lips.

A rough word roughly spoken, produces nothing but evil and drives many a sensitive soul to despair. It arouses animosity and hate, quite the opposite of a kindly word which awakens slumbering emotions and kindles a beneficent flame of love.

It may at times, especially when you are not in a pleasant humor, cost a great effort to launch the cheerful word, but if you will brush aside your own turbulent feelings, and send forth the cheer and sunshine of which you are capable of doing, you, too, to your amazement, will participate in their delicious sweets and enjoy the thrill of an unanticipated pleasure.

From the first moment when you begin to practice the scattering of cheering words, the whole atmosphere around you changes.

The world somehow seems drawn closer to heaven, and everything and everybody about you appears brighter and happier.

In reality, there is no change except in yourself. You have sown happiness and are reaping happiness.

You have flung broadcast the sanctified blessings and they are returning to you from every point of the compass, filling your soul with a joy unspeakable.

It is you who are nearer heaven, participating in its delights without knowing it, growing more lovable as the years speed by, dim your eye and whiten your hair.

Old friends turn to you in their sorrow for comfort.

The boys and girls go out of their way to meet and greet you.

Even the derelicts have in some manner heard your praises sung and respect you.

Their bleary eyes brighten and their tough old hearts soften when your name is spoken, in spite of their general belief that they are invulnerable to the gentle touches of kindness.

The greatest workers for the uplifting of humanity are the little words of cheer, which, when fitly spoken, often change beasts to men, spur them to loftier endeavor and turn their terrible night into a glorious day.

Uncommon Sense

RESULTS COUNT

AN ATHLETE desiring to prove to Epictetus that he was growing strong showed him his dumb-bells.

"I don't want to see the dumb-bells," said the philosopher. "I want to see your muscles."

It is results, not methods, that count with a man.

Many wealthy men have libraries stocked with the world's best literature, yet remain illiterate.

Abraham Lincoln had a Bible and a copy of Shakespeare, and was an educated man.

The world wants to know what you are, not how you became what you are.

Scores of young engineers proudly exhibit degrees from technical schools without being able to secure responsible positions.

But any young engineer who can show a capitalist a cheaper and better way to accomplish something important, can get a paying job.

Your training is your own affair. The affair of your prospective employer is the equipment for the job that your training has given you.

The "talent" before a prize fight do not care what sort of apparatus a contender is using. They place their bets on opinions formed from the way he is hitting in practice.

You must decide for yourself what profession you will follow, and take the advice of others as to the best way to train for it.

But do that training in private, and don't brag about it afterward.

The man you will have to work for will not ask you how many hours you spent on Latin and Greek, mathematics or psychology. He will ask you what you can do.

Show him what you can do, and if you can do it well, you have a chance. If you can't do it well, all your training, all your diplomas, all your letters of recommendation, will be worth absolutely nothing to you.

FEEDING THE FAMILY

THIS is the daily task of twenty million housewives in America—to provide a good meal for the family. As 90 per cent of our housewives must use economy, it is vital that they know how to spend the money provided them, for the best food. Our grocers tell us it is not the wealthy housewives, as a rule, who buy food, fruit, vegetables and luxuries out of season, but those who can least afford it. It is often a lack of knowledge of food values, and carelessness and indifference in regard to expenditures.

It should be the aim, and is, with a large majority of housekeepers, rich or poor, to feed the family well, with as little waste as possible and with as small a money outlay. Food is the big item in the weekly budget of the growing family and there is no one who can do more than suggest as to the wise spending of the income, for each family has its own problems which must be worked out in the same manner that a mother manages her children—no two need the same training or discipline.

Growing boys and men at active labor need substantial, filling meals. The boys need as much as grown men, for they are building their bodies as well as burning up food in their activities.

Men who are in offices, or occupied in positions where the brain is active and the body has little exercise, need much less of the energy-producing food. Their food should be of such combinations as are easily digested, though of course it should be nourishing as well. Pork and beans, ham and fried eggs, corn beef and cabbage are foods which the laborer or outdoor worker may eat freely, as such food is necessary.

Put as much interest into the planning of meals and the serving of them as is put into a game of bridge or a "movie" picture and we will have made a start toward the millennium.

Has Anyone Laughed At You Because —

By ETHEL R. PEYSER

You like good music? You have a reputation for liking good music; you don't like substitutes. You get more enjoyment and fodder out of an evening at a symphony concert than out of "jazz." You know that a dance tune out of Beethoven, Mozart or Brahms not only makes you over if you are tired but gives you your money's worth for a month. Why should you care if they laugh? You have liked good "jazz," maybe, that is written with artistry and melody yet on the whole you like what is called "good music." Rejoice over it. You taste of the stuff that gods are made of and you are the luckiest of mortals, for god food is rare today.

SO

Your get-away is here:

Ask your friends, "What music lives longer and why, 'Dardanella' or 'Aida'?" and "Why do the most lionly popular tunes die in a few minutes?" 'Nuf said.

THE STAR

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THERE is a star that hangs upon the east
That shines a little clearer than the rest,
Each night diminished not, nor yet increased—
A changeless jewel on the azure breast
Of eventide. Each twilight it returns
And with celestial tenderness it burns.

The struggle had been hard the whole day through;
All day the sky had glittered with the sun;
And then came night, and then came deeper blue,
The winds were still, songs hushed, the day was done—
And then the star, my perfect star, came out
And ended disappointment, ended doubt.

The struggle had been hard the whole day long,
The rivalry of competition, all
The ceaseless battle of the right and wrong;
I saw bad men arise and good men fall—
And marvelled much that things are as they are—
And then came night, and then again the star.

I do not know her name, that lovely light.
Astronomers may call her what they will.
To me the world's a sky, and life is night;
But there's a star, one star unchanging still
That shines for all, for age, for eager youth,
One star undimmed—and I have named her Truth.

THE ROMANCE OF WORDS

"CRYSTAL"

THE strange and erroneous notion current among the natural philosophers of antiquity—and of modern times down to a comparatively recent date—concerning the origin of crystal, was plainly traceable to the confusion occasioned by the object itself.

According to these teachers of a former day, crystal was ice which had undergone a peculiar process of induration so as to totally lose its power of being melted. In fact, Pliny, supporting one error with another, states that crystal is found only in countries which are extremely cold. Up to some two hundred years ago this idea about the formation of the substance still persisted, for Sir Thomas Browne considers it worth while to place it first and foremost among the "Vulgar Errors" which he sought to dissipate.

Though the mistake is more amusing than dangerous, it is easy to see how it arose, for the Greek word chrystallos, or ice, was early transferred to that quartz which closely resembles ice. In a little time it was tacitly assumed that the two substances were the same—a belief which persisted for many years.

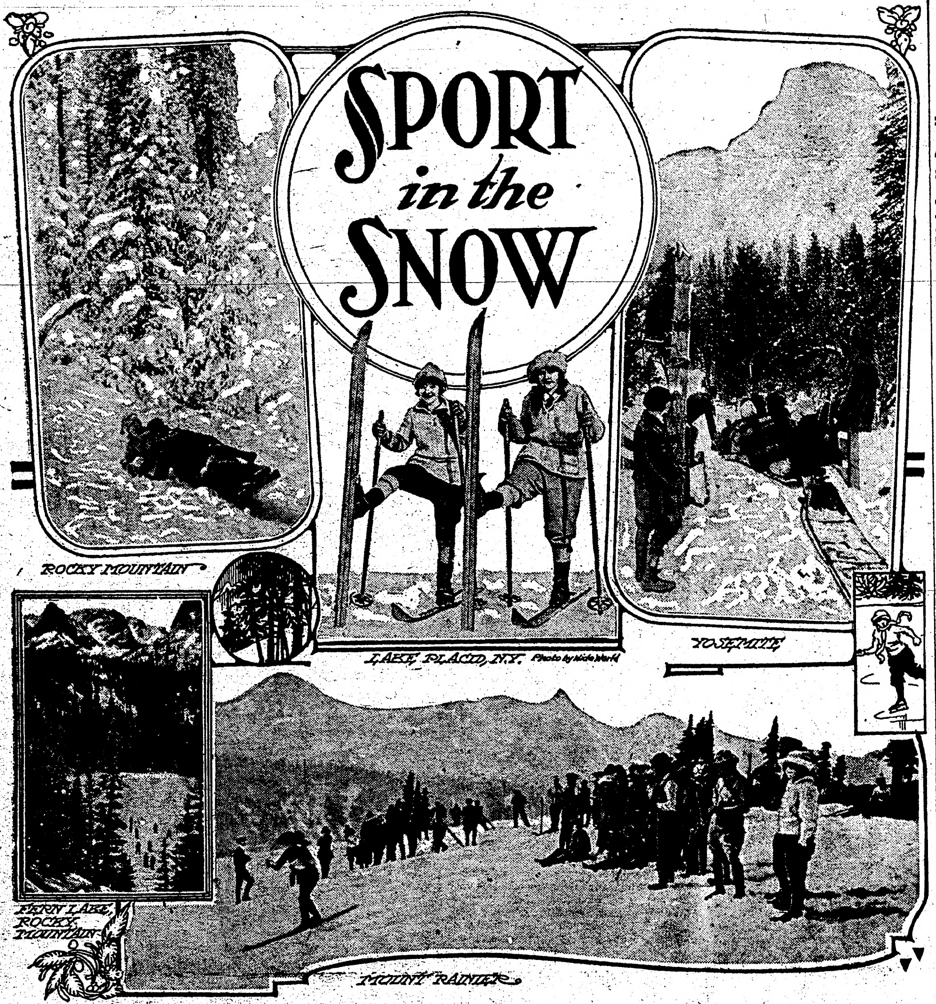
SPORT in the SNOW



By JOHN DICKINSON SHERMAN

I WALK upon the city street,
For so hath fate it writ;
Thoughts far away and bitter-sweet
Beguile with cheat my willing feet,
This, this the trail I hit:

The Fern Lake Trail, where virgin snow
Lies soft and deep the pines below,
Away from road and far from rail,
Snowshoe and ski to break the trail
(Toboggan's creak, the squeak of thong,
A girl's bright sash, a snatch of song,
A frost-nipped ear and quick snow rub,
The rest at noon for bite o' grub),
That winds and twists its way to make
From valley up to mountain lake,
With cabin on its frozen edge
And ski-run down its steep-hung ledge
And campfire throwing yellow light
That turns to gold a world of white—
A playground decked in brave array—
"Ho, ho, Jack Frost! We've come to play!"

Sport in the snow—it's been the proper caper all winter and the American people are still at it all through the North—from New England to Rocky Mountain and from Yosemite to Mount Rainier. Students of the times are commenting on it as a new phase in the evolution of the nation. These winter sports have been growing in popular favor for several years. This winter, however, their vogue is such as to make sociologists sit up and take notice.

Now there are winter sports and winter sports. For example, on a January Sunday 45,000 spectators gathered at the Garfield park lagoon to see a thousand or more Chicago boys and girls compete in a series of skating races. On the same Sunday 80,000 spectators attended an international ski tournament at Cary on Chicago's outskirts.

That is not what I mean by winter sports. What I mean by winter sports, by sport in the snow, is the people turning out to do the playing themselves, not to watch somebody else do the playing. And the people are doing it this year.

A generation or so ago the students of American life were complaining that the American people did not know how to play, took no vacations and all that sort of thing. Then the people did learn to play and did take vacations—in the summer. The next change was that a class of vacationists was evolved who took vacations all the year round. They played in the North in the summer and followed the warm weather South to Florida in the winter or West to California, or abroad. Now the society visitors to the South have been joined by the "Tin Can Tourists," who travel in flivvers—more than 8,000 held the fourth annual convention of the Tin Can Tourists of the World in De Soto park, Tampa, early in January of this year.

The latest development of this recently acquired appetite for summer and winter play on the part of the people is sport in the snow. It has been evolved since the war. Perhaps the red-blooded young fellows who came back from "Over There" in such fine physical condition that they must let off steam through real exercise have been in part responsible. Anyway, the idea has become widespread that coasting, tobogganing, skiing, snowshoeing, skijoring, hiking and all the other winter sports easily within the reach of the average American in the North are first-class fun. The complementary idea is that a real tussle with Jack Frost in his native wilds is more conducive to red blood and rosy cheeks and a good appetite than less strenuous exercise under warmer skies at home or abroad. An enthusiast might put it like this:

Jack Frost, you are no enemy of mine;
I rather look to you as friend in need.
'Tis true I love the outdoors all the year—
The recurrent miracle of the Spring
And splendor of the good old Summer-Time;
But more I love the Indian Summer days
Whose drowsy calm is charged with Autumn's tang,
Forecasting even then your coming reign.
And most of all I love the world of white
Of which you are the undisputed King
Who shouts his royal message, "Snappy Days!"
And offers to his subjects royal sports
That set red blood to dancing in their veins,
That give to them a joyous appetite,
That bring such sleep as money cannot buy.
Ho, ho, King Jack! It is your reign of frost
That hardens up the fiber of a man
To stature full of body, mind and soul.
Jack Frost, I know you for a wise old king!
Jack Frost, I know you for a friend in need!

Winter sports this season in New England are really on a big scale. About the middle of December a Boston Sunday newspaper felt warranted in getting out a "Special Winter Resort Edition" containing page after page of display advertisements of winter resorts in Vermont, New Hampshire, Maine and Massachusetts. It appears that over 100 hotels and inns are open for winter sports in these states, as against 60 last winter. The chambers of commerce in many cities have advertised liberally all winter. The New England railroads have made substantial reductions in fares for winter tourists. Enterprising cities have established municipal recreation grounds and arranged elaborate winter carnivals; some even advertised community Christmas trees, and a special program for Washington's birthday.

Among them all they offer a long list of sports, including tobogganing, snowshoeing, skiing, skijoring, skating, sleighing, coasting, curling, ski bobbing, hockey, ice boating, mountain climbing and hiking. Some even offer fishing through the ice and sugaring-off parties to a sugar camp. Scores of winter carnivals were staged during December, January and February, with every sort of entertainment in keeping with the season.

The news columns of the Eastern newspapers reflect the activity in winter sports. They set forth the winter migrations of various city clubs. It also appears from the news columns that society is doing it, too. Country clubs by the score that ordinarily close with the golfing season opened their doors to gay parties. Hundreds of country estates were kept open and were crowded with guests, whose names were recorded at great length by the society reporters. Sleepy county commissioners had to wake up and buy tractors to clear the roads for sleighing and skijoring.

Maine started in early to arrange a program and proclaimed its intention to become the "St. Moritz of America." The plans called for carnivals as follows: Waterville, January 25, 26 and 27; Portland, January 27; Augusta, February 15, 16 and 17; Bangor, February 22; Bar Harbor, February 22, and the University of Maine February 8, 9 and 10. Lafayette National park, the only one east of the Mississippi, is well adapted for winter sports and its use for that purpose is encouraged by the national park service.

In New York the Adirondacks were perhaps the center of winter sport. Lake Placid has had throngs of merrymakers all winter. Plattsburg had many visitors and a carnival in January. Saratoga Springs was active. The city took over Recreation Field, made many improvements and had an elaborate sports program for a week late in January. The Interstate Palisades park on the Hudson was visited by thousands, including boy scouts, girl scouts, Campfire Girls and their friends. There were ample hotel and camp accommodations and sport programs.

So much for winter sports in New England and the East. Now for a jump across the continent to national parks of the Scenic West.

Right here, however, it is well to note that our national park system, containing nineteen reservations, offers all-year attractions to the tourist, aside from the question of winter sports. Three of our national parks are all-year resorts—Grand Canyon, Hot Springs and Hawaii.

Yosemite, Mount Rainier and Rocky Mountain are the three Western national parks where the winter merrymakers most do congregate. They are all three easily accessible. They all three offer magnificent scenery. They all three offer natural playgrounds unsurpassed in the world. Enthusiasts believe that a very few years will see them as full of visitors in winter as in summer.

Yosemite is now an all-year national park under the auspices of the national park service. There were 4,182 visitors from November 1, 1921, to March 1, 1922, and the attendance this winter has been much greater. Most of the merrymakers stick to the floor of Yosemite Valley, which is sheltered. The hardier spirits climb to Glacier Point on the heights above. In a year or two there will be a model winter hotel, an all-year motor road into the valley and maybe a mechanical lift to Glacier Point. Yosemite's Christmas tree is a living Sequoia, 60 feet high.

Mount Rainier has unusual sport in the snow because of its topography and climatic conditions. The mountain is 14,408 feet high and, with its slopes, covers 100 square miles. Its lower slopes are heavily timbered. Then there is a flower zone. Then comes the everlasting snow and ice. So visitors bent on winter sport can have it the year round. The big hotel in Paradise Valley (5,400 elevation) is close to the snow and ice. The season officially begins June 15. The international ski tournament is held in July each year. So you can have winter sport one day and summer sport the next.

Rocky Mountain National park offers absolutely the real thing in the way of play in the snow with Jack Frost. Fern Lake (with Odessa Lake close by) has been selected for winter sports and is a natural playground tucked away in a deep valley on the east slope, right under the giant peaks of the Continental Divide. It's ten miles or so from Estes Park, the east entrance to the national park. You can get part way from Estes Park by automobile. Then the road quits. Then you've got to hit the trail on snowshoes or skis, and you've got to haul in your duffel by toboggan. Why? Because the snow is too deep for a packhorse; you're traveling up among the branches of the pine trees. And when you get to Fern Lake you'll live in log cabins. And there's the lake (8,500 elevation) in front of you and natural toboggan slides and ski-runs behind you and snowshoeing everywhere. Magnificent scenery is all around you.

Though there were 1,044,502 visitors to the national parks last summer, the American people are only just beginning to know something about these public playgrounds. For example, the average American assumes that because Rocky Mountain National park is perched on the Continental Divide it is terribly cold in winter. Well, the report of the United States weather bureau for the seven days, January 11-17, 1923, shows these maximum temperatures: 44, 47, 40, 37, 48, 50, 50; minimum temperatures, 30, 19, 25, 17, 23, 14, 32.

Nearly 2,000 red-blooded visitors have had the fun of getting up to Fern Lake and down again this winter, to say nothing of the playground joys. The climax of the fun is the two weeks at the end of February and the beginning of March.

All About the Vonsiatsky-Vonsiatskys!

Here's an interesting triangle that will presumably be elucidated in the American courts. Parties: Anatase Andrevitch Vonsiatsky-Vonsiatsky; his American wife and a Russian woman who claims to be his wife. The latter is now in this country and brought a lawyer with her. Mlle. Liobouv Mourimsky, to use her maiden name, is twenty-three, pretty, petite and chic—and had nothing to say when she landed.

The marriage a year ago of the youthful Anastase to Mrs. Marion Ream Stephens, who inherited one-seventh of the $40,000,000 estate of her father, Norman B. Ream, brought bitter threats from the young Russian woman, then in Paris.

At the time that Anastase married the heiress, who was almost twice his age, a divorced woman, the Russian woman declared her intention of prosecuting him on a charge of bigamy, and actually laid such a charge at the American embassy. She vowed also that she would bring suit against the American wife of Anastase to recover $500,000 for alienation of his affections.

The talk of prosecution on a charge of bigamy died after authorities at the Russian cathedral of St. Nicholas, where Anastase and Mrs. Stephens were married Feb. 8, 1922, declared that his marriage to Liobouv Mourimsky, which took place two years earlier in a cathedral in Russia, was void.

E. T. Sanford Named for Supreme Court

Edward Terry Sanford has been nominated by President Harding to be associate justice of the United States Supreme court in the place of Justice Pitney, resigned and retired on account of ill health amounting to physical inability. Judge Sanford has been United States district judge of the eastern and middle districts of Tennessee since 1908. Before that he was assistant attorney general of the United States. It was said at the time of his nomination that there probably would be a fight in congress against his confirmation, the possible opposition questioning the political wisdom of the appointment, rather than its fitness.

Judge Sanford was born in Knoxville, Tenn., in 1865. He is a college man and holds various degrees, including A. B., Harvard, 1885, A. M. and LL.B., 1889. He was admitted to the bar in 1888 and was a lecturer in the law department of the University of Tennessee, 1898-1907. He was a delegate to the universal congress of lawyers and jurists in St. Louis in 1904. He has served as vice president of the American Bar association and president of the Tennessee Bar association. His nomination was promptly confirmed.

Fred Lundin, Political "Mystery Man"

Everybody in Chicago and Illinois is talking politics. The whole state is "het up" over Mayor William Hale Thompson's announcement that he is not a candidate for re-election and the indictment of Fred Lundin in connection with charges of graft in the Chicago board of education.

Lundin is more or less a "mystery man" to the citizens of Illinois. He is popularly credited with being the long-time boss of the Thompson-Lundin-Small machine.

Lundin was born in Sweden in 1868. The date of his arrival in Chicago is not known. He first was a newsboy. Then he appeared peddling "Juniper Ade," a non-alcoholic beverage, with a wagon and two negro guitar players. Here is a contemporaneous description of the future Warwick, about thirty years ago:

"The driver himself was a youth of odd appearance. A cowboy hat of colossal proportions topped a mass of yellow hair and shadowed eyes that scanned the hurrying throngs on either hand, mysteriously, through huge amber glasses. The effect was enhanced by a full-tailed coat of black, which might have been designed for an undertaker—a vest of pristine whiteness, a snowy shirt front, a flowing black tie, and a rolling collar."

Lundin served in the Illinois state senate from 1894 to 1898. In 1908 he was elected to congress. Defeated for re-election he retired from personal battles for office, declaring, "I am out of politics." And he has reiterated the declaration ever since.

Quinonez, New President of Salvador

The citizens of Salvador have elected a new president. Dr. Alfonso Quinonez y Molina, the new chief magistrate, is fifty years old, and has devoted much of his life to the affairs of government. On graduating in the National university with a degree of bachelor of science, he took a post course and became a doctor of medicine.

In 1912 he was elected to his first public office, that of mayor of the capital city, San Salvador. He served as vice president from 1915 to 1919. He would have been a candidate for the presidency for the period of 1919-1923 had he not become ineligible through having managed the affairs of the government during the illness of the president, Carlos Melendez. The people of Salvador have for twenty-five years shown themselves entirely capable of choosing their chief executives, for no government has been overthrown by force during that period of time. Dr. Quinonez is an ardent Unionist. His country was the first to attempt, many years ago, the establishment of a Central American federation. Salvador is the most densely populated of the countries on the mainland of the American continent. In an area no larger than the state of New Jersey live 1,400,000 people—over one hundred to the square mile. The principal export is coffee. The crop of a few seasons ago reached 75 million pounds.

Pianos for the Japanese.

The piano is becoming a part of the Japanese household equipment, as it has become the favorite instrument with the younger element as well as other instruments from the western countries. The koto, which is the national harp, and the samisen have not been entirely abandoned, but as the younger natives come along they are showing a marked preference for the imported musical instruments. This is of course making a revolution in the character of the Japanese music.

Innocence falls afoul of duplicity as naturally in life as the lodestone seeks the magnet.

Washington

Washington—Colonel Ernest E. Bicknell, for many years prominent in Red Cross work, has been appointed vice chairman of the American Red Cross in charge of foreign operations, it was announced. He succeeds Dr. A. Ross Hill, resigned. Colonel Bicknell will serve without compensation, it was stated. He has represented the Red Cross on many important relief missions in the United States and abroad.

Washington—Several rare old state documents including what is believed the last officials letter penned by Abraham Lincoln, written the day before he died, were found recently in the department of justice archives. Attorney General H. M. Daugherty announced. Some of the documents are seeing the light of day for the first time in more than 100 years.

Washington—Drug smuggling and smuggling in general could be dealt a powerful blow by the government through rigid enforcement of section 13 of the LaFollette seamen's act, Patrick O'Brien, legislative representative of the International Seaman's union, stated. Chinese and Mediterannean seamen carry on the bulk of the smuggling operations centered around the United States, O'Brien said.

Washington—The Brazilian embassy, after communication with its government, announced that there was no truth in recently published reports that Brazil and Japan had reached an agreement for the migration of 500,000 Japanese to Brazil.
